The learned Judge who decided the case, however, held that the so-called Patti Sodhi consisted of the small area of 152 kanals only, and the mere fact of this patti being recorded separately in the settlement papers was insufficient to prove that the Sodhi Khatris had adopted agricultural custom with all its incidents. In this case also the Brahmins are malikan-i-maqbuza, have no share in the shamilat, and have another source of income for their livelihood. The mere fact that their patti known as Brahman Majra is recorded as a separate patti in the jamabandi cannot prove that the Brahmins have adopted the agricultural custom with all its incidents as to alienation and succession to the exclusion of their personal law.

In the case reported as Harnam Singh v. Hardei (3) at page 156* the learned Judge on the facts of the case made the following remark, which is fully applicable to the present case:—

"Though these Sodhis have held land in the village for nearly 90 years, they did not come in with the founders, they are only qabza maliks, they number only five families, holding 160 acres of land out of a village area of 3,000 acres. Then there is no positive evidence one way or the other whether they live solely by agriculture; one would imagine it would be difficult for five families to live on the profits of so small an area as that stated above."

These facts were very similar to facts established in this case and the learned Judge came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs in that case failed to establish that they had adopted the agricultural custom and had abandoned their own personal laws.

Taking the findings of the lower Appellate Court and the above circumstances into our consideration we have also arrived at the same conclusion. We hold that the view taken by the lower Appellate Court was a right view. In this view it is not necessary to decide the question of legal necessity and consideration, as to which both the Courts below have arrived at a concurrent finding, and this finding has not been seriously contested before us. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

MARTINEAU, J. (June 14, 1919).—I concur, and I may refer also to the following passage from Tulsi Ram v. Nathu (4) on page 23† of the report: "The Brahmans in this village whose number is very small form but a small part of the village population, and it is not at all clear that they are members of the compact village community of the Hindu Jats, who are doubtless governed by customs. It is quite possible that these Brahman families have been influenced in matters of succession and alienation by the customs of their Jat neighbours, but even so it is for the plaintiffs to prove by satisfactory evidence to what extent they have been influenced in this direction." Those remarks are applicable here. The plaintiff has to show how far the Brahmans of the village with which this case is concerned have adopted the customs of their agricultural neighbours. He has failed to show that they have adopted any of those customs, and I agree, therefore, with my learned brother that the appeal must fail.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The lower Appellate Court erred in issuing the warrant. The force or fraud relied on under section 48 (2), Civil Procedure Code, as saving limitation was long anterior to the date of the last application. The decree-holder is not entitled to the benefit of the provision. Seshachalam Chetti v. Rajam Chetty (1).

In the earlier application, i. e., on 11th April 1917, this was not pleaded. The omission to plead operates as res judicata. In that application leave was asked to amend. The Appellate Court held it was a fresh application which was barred. Then the decree-holder should have relied on section 48 (2).

Mr. M. D. Devadoss, for the Respondent in No. 6.—Section 48 (2), Civil Procedure Code, does not limit the time within which the fraud or force occurred. If it was at some time within 12 years after the decree, there is no bar. See Venkayya v. Raghavacharlu (2), Abdul Khadir v. Ajiyar Ahammad (3).

It was not necessary for plaintiffs to have mentioned that they relied on section 48 (2) when they made the last application for execution.

REAJADDI SARKAR v. GANGA CHARAN.

The present application for execution was made on the 4th October 1917, clearly more than 12 years after the date of the decree. The question is whether the bar is saved by the operation of clause (2) of section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code. The lower Appellate Court held in favour of the decree holder.

Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar for the appellant contended, first, that the respondent is barred by res judicata from presenting the application under execution On the 11th April 1917 the decree holder applied to the Court to allow him to convert an execution application filed by him for the arrest of the judgment debtor into one for the attachment of his property. In the Appellate Court it was held that the application to amend was a fresh application and that in that view it was barred by limitation. The learned Vakil contends that it was open to the decree-holder to have pleaded in that application that he was prevented by force or fraud from filing his application earlier and that this failure operates as res judicata now. Even granting that to execution applications all the disabilities which attach to a plaintiff failing to plead are applicable, we are clear that, when an applicant wants his application to be treated as one in time, it cannot be said that he ought to have pleaded that there was fraud or force which prevented him from applying in time. We overrule this contention.

The second point was that the fraud which was pleaded in extenuation of the failure to apply in time was a long time anterior to the date of the last application and that consequently the decree holder is not entitled to the benefit of clause (2) of section 48. Even granting that the rigid test insisted on by Mr. Justice Shephard in Seshachalam Chetti v. Rajam Chetty (1) is the proper one, we are of opinion that the application to arrest the judgment-debtor on the 14th February 1916 satisfied that test. The matter was not disposed of till March 1917. Further in Venkayya v. Raghavacharlu (2) impliedly and in Abdul Khadir v. Ajiyar Ahammad (3) Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar expressedly did not act on the view taken by Mr. Justice Shephard. We are inclined to agree with the view taken in the later cases. We are supported by Mohsin Ali v. Masoom Ali (4) in our conclusion.

We think the lower Appellate Court is right and dismiss Civil Miscellaneous Second Appeal No. 6 of 1919 with costs and Civil Miscellaneous Second Appeal No. 7 of 1919 without costs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s 32—Recitals in documents not inter partes, admissibility of—Objection to admissibility not taken in trial Court, whether can be taken in Appellate Court.

Recitals in documents not inter partes are ordinarily irrelevant, unless the statements in the documents can be brought within the conditions of section 32 of the Evidence Act. Statements in documents not inter partes limiting the interest of the executants by declaring the boundaries of certain land fall within section 32, clause (3), of the Evidence Act, and are, therefore, admissible in evidence if the conditions necessary to bring section 32 into operation are proved. [p. 864, col. 1.]

Where no objection is taken in the first Court to the admission in evidence of documents not inter partes, objection cannot be taken in appeal that it has not been proved that the conditions exist which make section 32 applicable. [p. 864, cols. 1 & 2.]

Babu Prokash Chandra Mazumdar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which this appeal arises the plaintiff No. 1 sought to recover possession of a plot of land after establishment of his title as lessee under the original plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 7. The plaintiffs Nos. 5 and 6 at first denied having granted any leasehold interest to plaintiff No. 1 and were then made defendants Nos. 10 and 11. Subsequently they compromised the suit with the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs claimed the land as being included in a Beel named Singhdoori Beel. The principal defendant No. 1 contested the suit, alleging that the land did not appertain to Singhdoori Beel, but to Danga land of the Beel appertaining to a jama which he held under the owner of a Niskar tenure.

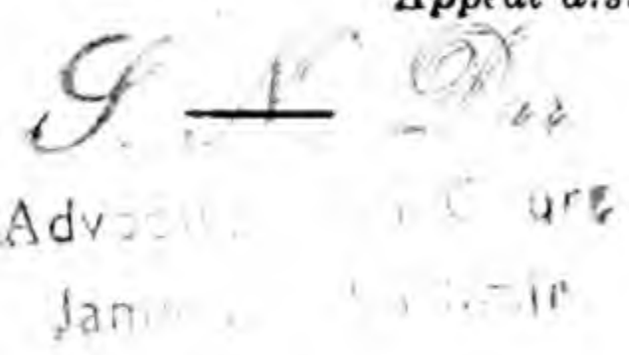
The main question in the case is one of parcel or no parcel, and on that the finding of the lower Appellate Court is conclusive unless it can be shown that in coming to that finding he committed an error of law.

The judgment is attacked on two grounds. The first is that certain documents relating to lands on the border of the land in suit, which were executed by persons who are no parties to this litigation, have been wrongly admitted in evidence. There were several of these documents filed on behalf of the plaintiffs, some of which were admitted without objection and some after objection. The law as regards the relevancy of documents of this nature appears to be that the general rule is that recitals in documents not inter partes are ordinarily irrelevant, as was held in the case of Brajeshware Peshakar v. Budhanuddi (1) which was followed in the case of Rahimjan Bibi v. Imanjan Bibi (2). But there is an exception to this general rule if the statement in the documents can be brought within the conditions of section 32 of the Evidence Act, and it has been held that statements in such deeds limiting the interest by declaring the boundaries fall within clause 3 of section 32 and are, therefore, admissible in evidence, if the conditions necessary to bring section 32 into operation are proved. Of the cases which support this view the earliest cited is Rajah Leelanund Singh v. Lakhputtee Thakoorain (3) and the latest is Abdullah v. Kunja Behari Lal (4). It has also been held that when no objection is taken in the first Court to the admission of documents of this sort in evidence, objection cannot be taken in appeal that it has not been proved that the conditions exist which make section 32 applicable. Ambar Ali v. Lutfe Ali (5).

Applying these principles, I hold that Exhibits 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12, which have been relied on by the lower Appellate Court as evidence in the plaintiff's favour, should have been treated as irrelevant. But I do not think it necessary to remand the case for re-hearing on that ground. On behalf of the appellant my attention was drawn to an unreported case, Second Appeal No. 1795 of 1911 decided on the 16th April 1913 by Mr. Justice Harington and myself, and in that case, after holding that the document made between the parties who are not parties to the suit, which contained a statement with regard to the land in dispute, had been wrongly admitted in evidence, we nevertheless held that as there was other evidence to support the finding of the Judge it was unnecessary to remand the case for re-hearing on this ground. In the present case there appears to be ample evidence to support the finding of the lower Appellate Court on the question at issue. There are documents, Exhibits 3 and 13, of similar nature to those which I hold to have been wrongly treated as admissible and other documentary and oral evidence to which reference is made in the judgment. I do not think that so much importance would have been given to the statements in the documents Exhibits 7 to 12 that if they had been omitted from consideration the learned Subordinate Judge would have come to a different conclusion on the issue of parcel or no parcel.



The second point taken in this appeal is that the plaintiff has failed to prove his title to the whole 16 annas leasehold interest. There appears to be no substance in this contention. It is based on the fact that at one time two of the plaintiff's lessors, who were subsequently made defendants Nos. 10 and 11, denied the plaintiff's leasehold right under them. It is true that by their subsequent compromise they could not give the plaintiff a right which would entitle him to a decree if he had not that right at the time when he instituted the suit. But the question of the plaintiff's right as lessee depends on the evidence as a whole. If the lease on which the plaintiff relies is found to be genuine

(1) 6 C. 268; 7 C. L. R. 6.
(2) 15 Ind. Cas. 698; 17 C. L. J. 173.
(3) 22 W. R 231.
(4) 12 Ind. Cas. 149; 14 C. L. J. 467; 16 C. W. N. 252.
(5) 41 Ind. Cas. 116; 25 C. L. J. 619; 21 C. W. N. 996; 45 C. 159.

he obtains thereby an interest in the whole 16 annas. The dispute between him and defendants Nos. 10 and 11 is quite unconnected with the dispute between him and the defendant No. 1. If his case against defendant No. 1 failed on the merits, the compromise would give him no advantage. If he succeeded in establishing his case as against defendant No. 1, all that the compromise did was to give the defendants Nos. 10 and 11 benefit of the decree obtained by plaintiff No. 1, which they would otherwise have lost on being transferred from the category of plaintiffs to that of defendants.

The appeal fails on both the points urged and is dismissed with costs.

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan for Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellant.

Lala Balwant Rai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants are monthly tenants in a house belonging to Hari Pershad. The latter leased the house to the plaintiff on the 1st October 1917. The plaintiff on the 16th February 1918 gave the defendants a notice to vacate the house before the 16th March. The defendants replied that they had no knowledge of the plaintiff's lease, and that they did not recognize him as the landlord. Then at the plaintiff's instance the owner of the house sent a notice to the defendants on the 23rd March to quit the house in a week. As the defendants did not comply with the notice, the plaintiff brought the present suit for ejectment and for Rs. 79-12-0 on account of rent. The first Court passed a decree for ejectment and for Rs. 17-14-6 on account of rent. On the defendants' appeal the District Judge altered the decree for rent to one for Rs. 19-2-0, and dismissed the claim for ejectment. The plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

The only question is as to the validity of the notice given by the plaintiff on the 16th February 1918, as it is not contended on his behalf that the notice given by the landlord on the 23rd March to quit the house in a week was a valid one. The learned District Judge holds that the defendants were not obliged to accept any one as their new landlord without due intimation from the old landlord, and that they were, therefore, entitled to treat the notice of the 16th February as a nullity. This is not a correct view. It is laid down on page 1701 of Gour's Law of Transfer, 4th Edition, that no notice is required to be given of an assignment, and Counsel for the respondents has not cited any authority to the contrary.

As to the right of the plaintiff to give the defendants notice to quit, this appears to be clear from section 109 of the Transfer of Property Act. A lease of immoveable property is, as is defined in section 105, a transfer of a right to enjoy such property, and section 109 provides that if the lessor transfers the property leased or any part thereof or any part of his interest therein, the transferee, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, shall possess all the rights of the lessor as to the property transferred.

It has also been held in Manikkam Pillai v. Rathnasami Nadar (1) that the rule of English law that the person entitled to the immediate reversion of the demised premises is the proper person to give the notice to quit is applicable to India, and that the words 'transferee of any interest" in section 109 of the Transfer of Property Act include the term lessee.

Counsel for the respondents relies on the words "in the absence of a contract to the contrary" in section 109, and contends that by the terms of the plaintiff's lease, it was only his lessor who could have the tenant ejected, and that, therefore, he alone, and not the plaintiff, could give notice to the defendants to quit. I do not agree with this contention. The material words in the lease executed by the plaintiff are:— "Jo kirayadar is wakt abad hain un se makan khali karane ka aur kiraya wasul karne ka mujh ko ikhtiyar hoga, agar koi makan khali na kare to malik ko khali karakar dena hoga, aur in makanat ka main wuh kiraya lene ka mustahik hunga jo kirayadar se milega, aur khali karane ke bad ziyadati kiraya ka aur tabdili kirayadaran ka mujh ko ikhtiyar hoga." The first sentence clearly gives the plaintiff the right to eject the tenants, and that right is not taken away by the second sentence, which gives the plaintiff the further right, where a tenant refuses to quit, of calling upon the owner to eject him.

I hold, therefore, that the plaintiff was entitled to serve the defendants with a notice to quit the house, and that it was not necessary for the landlord to inform the defendants that he had leased the house to the plaintiff.

It is argued finally for the defendants that the notice, in order to be valid, must be for a period expiring at the end of the month of the tenancy, that it is not shown that the tenancy ended on the 15th of the month, and that, therefore, the notice given to the defendants on the 16th February to quit the house before the 16th March was not a valid notice. The defendants are, however, not entitled to set up this defence now, as they did not set it up at the trial. Had the plea been raised at the trial, the plaintiff might have been able to prove that the defendants' tenancy ended on the 15th of the month.

The notice must be held to be valid, and I accordingly accept the appeal and give the plaintiff a decree for the ejectment of the defendants from the house in addition to the decree for Rs. 19-2-0 passed by the lower Appellate Court. The defendants will pay the plaintiff's costs in proportion to the decree in the first Court, and full costs in the lower Appellate Court and this Court.

JUDGMENT.

LORD ATKINSON.—This is an appeal from a decree, dated the 8th September 1913, of the Officiating Additional Judicial Commissioner (Mr. J. Mittra), modifying a decree, dated the 26th February 1912, of the Second Additional District Judge, East Berar.

To make the evidence and contentions put forward in the case intelligible, it is necessary, especially as the respondents unfortunately do not appear before the Board, to set out as a preliminary the pedigree of the principal appellant Amritrao. It is not disputed that it is correctly set forth in the following table :—

The family of Sonaji was a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law.

Sonaji's second son, Amritrao, was evidently a man of enterprise. He and the other appellants contend that he separated completely and effectually from his family in or about the year 1870, twenty-seven or twenty-eight years before his father's death in 1898, and that after his separation he acquired by his own exertions the property, considerable for him, described in Schedule B attached to the plaint in the action out of which the appeal has arisen. He claims this as his own. The effort of his youngest brother Gulabrao and of the descendants of his younger brother Motirao, if not of the plaintiff in this suit, who is the adopted son of the eldest son of the family, Bhagwantrao by name, is to establish that the aforesaid property in Schedule B is, in reality, the property of the joint family, on the ground that he, Amritrao, never completely and effectually separated from his family, and that the wealth which he subsequently acquired is merely an accretion of the portion of the family property, whether his full share of it or not, of which he obtained the possession and enjoyment at the time of the alleged separation. It is obvious that if this latter contention were established the plaintiffs, the descendants of Motirao, Amritrao's brother, and his youngest brother Gulabrao would become entitled, each to one fourth, of the property Amritrao claims as his own. The significance and effect of all Amritrao's action, and his efforts, after the year 1870, to acquire property depend upon the question whether he then effectually separated himself from his family or not. That is the dominant, if not indeed the crucial, question in the case. It is admitted that no regular deed of partition was executed at the time of this alleged partition, for the reason given, not unnatural if true, that the family then owned no land which needed to be divided, but even if this were not so, it is well established that the unequivocal and unmistakeable manifestation by a member of a joint Hindu family by his words or conduct of a fixed or determined intention to become separate is sufficient to effect the separation of his title and the severance of his interest, although division of possession, or partition by metes and bounds, does not take place, or though there be no separation in food and dwelling. And of course a separating member of such a family may of his own free will accept as his share as small a portion of the joint property as seems good to him, and renounce all claims to the rest.

The pleadings in the action out of which this appeal has arisen are, having regard to the grounds of the decision of the Judicial Commissioner, worthy of attention.

Originally Amritrao and his three sons were not made defendants. They were added at the instance of Gulabrao. In the first paragraph of the plaint it is stated that Amritrao took some fields as his share and became separate thirty years before the date of the institution of the suit in the year 1907; that he had no right whatever to the joint property and that after his separation his three brothers remained joint. In paragraph 2 it is further stated that since the previous year Gulabrao and his grandson Sadasheo took possession of the entire property, i. e., the joint property mentioned in Schedule A, and denied the plaintiffs' claim thereto. The relief prayed is first the partition of this latter property, and then by amendment, presumably after the addition of Amritrao and his sons as defendants, if the property in his possession should be held by the Court to be joint, partition of the property described in both Schedules A and B.

It is clear from this that the claim to the property described in Schedule B was put forward by Gulabrao and not, in the first instance, by any other of the parties litigant. But he is not content, apparently, with merely increasing the amount of the family property by having the property in his brother's possession brought in as part of it. He aims in addition at decreasing the number of sharers, and consequently increasing the amount of his own share, and accordingly in his written statement, paragraph 3, he alleges that the plaintiff's adoptive father separated from his father Sonaji before he, Gulabrao, or the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the sons of Motirao, were born. The defendants Amritrao and his two sons filed their written statement in the month of February 1910, in paragraph 5 of which they allege that Amritrao had separated from his father about forty years previously; that at the time he separated there was no family property to be divided, and that he then got nothing; that no portion of the property of which he was now possessed is ancestral property, and that all the property he holds was acquired by him after his separation. Upon these pleadings the two following issues, amongst others, were settled by the Additional District Judge:—

"5. (a) Did Amritrao (defendant No. 5) separate from his father Sonaji, 40 years ago, as alleged; and is the estate now in possession of defendant No. 5 and his sons the self-acquired property of defendant No. 5?

"(b) If it be not his self-acquired property, is not that estate liable to be brought into hotch-potch?"

The Additional District Judge in over four closely printed pages of the record examines the evidence, oral and written, bearing on these issues in minute detail and with considerable acumen.

In paragraph 18 of his judgment he deals with the nature of Amritrao's interest in a field called Akhar situated at Nagarwadi and comes to the conclusion that it can be safely stated that the lands at Nagarwadi in the possession at the date of the suit of Amritrao were never owned by his father Sonaji. As the nature of Amritrao's interest in this field is, in their Lordships' view, apparently, the pivot on which the judgment of the appellate tribunal turns, it is necessary to examine the evidence touching it:—

It is proved that Sonaji first lived at the village of Khed, that he then went to live at Udkhed and from thence went to live at Nagarwadi, where he continued to reside for twenty years, for the whole or most of the period with his four sons, and then returned to the village of Khed leaving Amritrao behind him at Nagarwadi. The landed property in Schedule B consists of seven fields at Daharur, five fields at Nagarwadi, three fields and four houses at Khed and three houses at Nagarwadi. The other property consists of cattle, implements of husbandry, Khand-Juar and gold amounting to Rs. 500, and household furniture, etc. It is proved, indeed is not disputed, that this field Akhar stood in the revenue records in 1870 and still stands in the name of Amritrao. It is likewise not disputed that there is no documentary evidence to show that Sonaji ever acquired any lands at Nagarwadi. A witness named Hari, however, was examined on behalf of Amritrao. He stated in his evidence-in chief that he was, when examined on the 26th September 1911, about 62 years of age. He would, therefore, be about 21 years of age in the year 1870. He then states he was only 12 years old when he came to Nagarwadi, which was then not inhabited; that twelve to fifteen families then came from Khed, Sonaji and his family amongst them; that Sonaji went back to Khed taking Motirao and Gulabrao with him, but that Amritrao, then 30 years old, continued to live at Nagarwadi, that soon after Sonaji left for Khed, Amritrao purchased a field called Bablicha from the witness's uncle for Rs. 700, and that fifteen years after Sonaji left Amritrao purchased from the witness's cousin another field called Vadicha and built a big house at Nagarwadi and two Gayavadas adjoining it.

On cross-examination, however, the witness said that Amritrao and his father lived in the same house at Nagarwadi; that they owned one field called Akhar there; that they cultivated it; that they had two bullocks; that Sonaji was the Patel of the village, that the site of the Gayavada did not belong to Sonaji, and that Sonaji, so long as Amritrao was there, used to visit him at Nagarwadi, but that the latter never went to Khed; and that the fields above mentioned were never sold in his presence.

In cross-examination on behalf of Gulabrao and his son Sadasheo, the witness said: "I do not know of any partition between Sonaji and defendant No. 5, i. e, Amritrao; the latter has got fields at Dasoor. I do not know what fields Sonaji had or Bhagwantrao had or Gulabrao has."

There is some apparent inconsistency between this witness's evidence in chief and on cross-examination; but it appears to their Lordships that the real weakness of his evidence lies in this that, while he may be testifying truly as to events which he saw or was acquainted with, his testimony as to the title of, or interests of these persons in the property they cultivated or were in possession of or inherited is perfectly worthless, especially as a separation may be effected by a fixed intention clearly expressed by the member of a family who desired it, Sonaji and his son Amritrao were on friendly terms. The latter was evidently prospering in his business. There was nothing unnatural in the father assisting the son in the cultivation of this field Akhar, though he, the father, had no interest whatever in it. Yet from this statement by the witness Hari, uncorroborated by any evidence whatever, that the father and son owned this field which they cultivated together, the Judicial Commissioner comes to the conclusion that the field was family property. Not only does he do this, but taking that fact as established, he proceeds to hold that fields Nos. 1, 6 and 70 of Dasoor owned in 1870 and thenstanding in Amritrao's name were also in the same position and then treating them as the nucleus as family property, he apparently concludes that all the valuable property included in Schedule B has been acquired by the use and enjoyment during subsequent years of this nucleus, and is, therefore, an accretion of it, partaking of its character as family property.

It appears to their Lordships that these are not sound or legitimate conclusions from the facts proved.

The District Judge in paragraphs 20 and 21 of his judgment finds that during Sonaji's lifetime he and his son Amritrao had different khatas with the same creditors, that on the former's death his khatas were continued in the names of Motirao and Gulabrao and not of Amritrao (Exhibit 5 D-3 proves this), that when the creditors sued for the recovery of the debts Amritrao was not made a defendant, and that it was clear that Amritrao was separate in food, residence and dealings from Sonaji and his brothers, while the dealings of Sonaji and his sons Motirao and Gulabrao were joint. And he further finds in favour of Amritrao and his sons, (1) cesser of commensality, (2) separation in residence and food for many years, (3) separate money transactions, and separate and exclusive dealing with the property in their possession. In paragraph 26 he ultimately finds that Amritrao separated from his father about 1870, that the property in his possession and that of his sons is his self-acquired, and is not liable to be brought into hotch-potch on a partition between the plaintiff and the defendants from Nos. 1 to 4 —these are: Narayanrao Motirao, Rangrao Motirao, Gulabrao Sonaji and Sadasheo Gulabrao. This last triple finding is in entire accord with the evidence given by Motirao and Gulabrao in a suit instituted in the year 1900 in the Judicial Commissioner's Court on the death of Bhagwantrao, in which the plaintiff in the present action and Amritrao both claimed the Patelki of Nagarwadi, which had been recorded in the name of the eldest brother, then recently deceased. Motirao on the 24th of July 1900, in the course of his evidence, stated on oath that the only ancestral property his father left consisted of two fields and the Watan, that Amritrao took his share and separated. And Bhagwantrao himself and Gulabrao kept the share together. That the Watan should be transferred to Mukundrao by right of adoption. Gulabrao, in the course of his evidence, stated: "The deceased, Motirao, and myself were living together, and Amritrao was separate from us."

This is also in accord with the evidence, given by the present plaintiff and his three uncles in a suit instituted in the Revenue Court in July 1901, in which the plaintiff in the present suit claimed to be registered as the Deshmuki Watan. The evidence runs as follows:—

"Amritrao stated as follows:—'I am separate. Motirao, Gulabrao and the deceased were joint. Deshmukhi may be recorded in my name in the place of the deceased.'

"Motirao stated as follows:—'Amritrao is separate and all of us are joint. The name of the adopted son may be entered in the Deshmukhi register.'

"Gulabrao stated:—'My statement is the same as that of my brother Motirao.'

"Mukundrao (plaintiff) stated:—'Bhagwantrao Deshmukh is dead. He has no legitimate son. I am his adopted son. He has no wife. He has three real brothers, namely, Amritrao, Motirao and Gulabrao. Amritrao is separate and all of us are joint.'"

Again in mutation proceedings instituted in November 1900 by the plaintiff in the present suit claiming to have recorded in his name a field, Survey No. 2, situated in Mauza Indoor, 16 bighas in extent of which his adopted father was the khata-holder, both he and Amritrao repeat the assertion that the latter was separate and his three brothers were joint. As to the field of Akhar, the Judicial Commissioner seems to have attached little weight to all this evidence, and relied in preference on that of the witness Hari. This has been already dealt with. Their Lordships are quite unable to concur with him in the view taken upon this point.

Having come to the conclusion on the evidence of Hari that this field, though standing in the name of Amritrao in the revenue records, was family property, he proceeds to determine what other property similarly recorded was in reality the property of the family. And he finds that fields Nos. 1, 6 and 70 at Dasoor were owned if not acquired in 1870, but that they were uncultivated lands and it was alleged could be acquired for nothing. Then he finds there were three fields at Nagarwadi which Amritrao claimed to have bought about the year 1870. No witness gives any evidence as to any of these fields, similar or at all to the effect of Hari's evidence. In reference to the field Akhar, yet the learned Commissioner says:—

"The conclusion I have come to in reference to this field weakens any presumption that might have been made in respect of these Dasoor fields from the fact that they stand in Amritrao's name in the revenue records."

and then states his conclusion and the grounds of it in the following passage of his judgment, p. 190:—

"Three of the fields he claims to have bought. These are Nagarwadi fields all acquired about the year 1870. The rest of the fields meaning the Dasoor fields were, according to him, acquired at settlement. In my opinion it was for Amritrao to prove clearly that the fields acquired in 1870 were acquired after his father left Nagarwadi, notwithstanding that the fields stood in his name. For I have shown that another field acquired in 1870 was joint property though standing in his name. I am inclined to think that the field at Indoor and the Akhar field would be a sufficient nucleus after defraying the expenses of the family for the acquisition of the rest of the property as it was acquired from time to time. At any rate if as I presume all the fields acquired in 1870 to be joint property—that would be amply sufficient for the acquisition of the others. Now Amritrao says that he dealt in cotton. But I find no sufficient proof on the record to show that he did so in the early seventies."

In their Lordships' view this reasoning would have been entirely faulty even if it had been satisfactorily established, which it has not been, that the field Akbar was the property of the joint family.

If the fact be as the plaintiff, his natural father and his two uncles have in effect declared, that in 1870 Amritrao took his share and separated from the family leaving his three brothers joint, then no such burden of proof as is in this paragraph indicated rests upon him. The suggestion that the surplus income from the field at Indoor and the field at Akbar, after defraying the expenses of the family, was sufficient even by its most profitable use to acquire all the property in Schedule B appears to their Lordships to be quite fanciful.

The learned Commissioner then endeavours to discount the sworn evidence of Motirao in the two suits instituted in 1900 and 1901 to the above effect already mentioned. He says that this witness no doubt used the word "separated" in its technical sense but that he, the Commissioner, had formed the opinion that the statement was apparently made because Amritrao was living separate and holding property which he had claimed to be his exclusive property, and "that the plaintiff in the earlier stages of the present suit and his father believed that the property in the possession of Amritrao was the latter's self-acquisition in the profits of which they had not participated." That was a bona fide mistake to make when Amritrao was living in a different village holding property solely in his own name. It was just one of those mixed questions of fact and law on which one is apt to make a mistake. The father of this family, Sonaji, lived till 1898, Motirao till 1902 and Bhagwantrao till 1905. It appears to their Lordships that under these circumstances it is quite impossible to suppose that it was not perfectly well known in the family whether in fact Amritrao separated from it in the technical sense or not. The learned Commissioner does not indicate precisely on what grounds he bases his excuse for Motirao's erroneous testimony. Their Lordships are quite unable to concur in his opinion on this point.

The learned Commissioner then proceeds to deal with the evidence of the prime instigator of this litigation so far as it touches the property described in Schedule B—Gulabrao. This witness does not condescend to say that he made a mistake on a mixed question of law and fact when he swore distinctly on the 24th July 1900 that he himself and his deceased brother Motirao were living together and Amritrao was separate from them, and again on the 29th July, when he swore that his statement was the same as that of his brother's, Motirao, which was to the effect that Amritrao was separate and all of them were joint. On the contrary, he admits he made these statements. He deliberately contradicts them, but he neither explains them, nor excuses himself for having made them on the ground that he was mistaken as to the facts or on any other ground whatever. He now swears: "Though all the defendants, Amritrao, Motirao, are joint, they hold different fields in their respective names." And again: "There was no partition between Amritrao, Motirao, and myself; we were all joint. We took fields in our names as we found it convenient to do so."

In the face of this deliberate contradiction by Gulabrao on oath of his two earlier statements to be found at pages 78 and 86 of the record, it is not without some surprise that one reads the statement of the learned Commissioner at page 193 of the record to the effect, that this witness had not committed himself to a definite statement of facts which could prima facie preclude him from arguing the appeal. The learned Commissioner states further that he was not prepared to hold the somewhat summary record of the witness' statement in Exhibit P 2 (78) as a clear statement of facts which disentitled him to relief, that his later statement in P 5 (86) is certainly in accordance with his present statement, which amounts to saying this that the statement, "Motirao and myself were living together and Amritrao was separate from us" is in accordance with the statement that "Amritrao, Motirao and myself are joint, there was no partition between us."

Their Lordships take an entirely different view. They think that Gulabrao is a wholly unreliable, if indeed not a deliberately false witness, and that the natural meaning of the statements he made in 1900 and 1901 is that Amritrao, having separated from his family, the property he had acquired was his own, not that of his family. The appellant Amritrao has on every occasion made the same case. Their Lordships accept, as did the learned District Judge, his explanation of the lease to his father of his field at Dasoor. He stated that he was at the time he gave his evidence in this suit, the 26th of April 1911, about seventy-five years of age. From the year 1870 till then, he has asserted ownership over the property mentioned in Schedule B as it was acquired, and also over the property by the aid of which it was acquired. Those who dealt with him in his business transactions treated him as acting and entitled to act for himself alone, his debts being his own separate debts and not the joint debts of himself and others. In the course of years, from 1870 till the institution of the present suit in 1907, none of the members of his father's family ever asserted a legal claim to a share of his increasing wealth. They would not have done so now but for the inconsistent conduct of the discredited and unreliable witness Gulabrao. He took advantage of a suit having been rightly instituted for the partition of the property, mentioned in Schedule A, to cause the plaint to be amended by adding Amritrao and his three sons as defendants, and to claim partition of the property in their possession described in Schedule B. The District Judge held that the original plaintiff Mukundrao was entitled to such a decree as he claimed as to the property in Schedule A, but was not entitled to it as to the property in Schedule B. The Judicial Commissioner modified the decree by deciding that the plaintiff was entitled to a fourth share, not only of the property mentioned in Schedule A, but also of the immoveable properties mentioned in Schedule B. Neither the plaintiff nor Gulabrao have appeared before their Lordships to support the decree of the Judicial Commissioner, hence the necessity of dealing at length in this judgment with the evidence and the grounds of the learned Commissioner's judgment. Their Lordships clearly are of opinion that the decision of the latter was wrong and should be reversed, and the decision and decree of the District Judge were right and should be restored, and that the costs incurred by the added defendants in the appeal before the Judicial Commissioner and before this Board should be paid by the respondents Gulabrao and Sadasheo. And they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Landlord and tenant—Kabuliyat, suit for rent on basis of—Coercion, plea of—Burden of proof—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 15.

Where a suit for rent upon a kabuliyat is resisted by the defendant on the ground that the kabuliyat, having been obtained from him by coercion, is not binding on him, it is for him to prove his allegation and, unless he does so, he is bound by the terms of the kabuliyat. In such a case it is not for the plaintiff to prove the inception of the tenancy, the area of the land demised and the rent payable by the defendant. [p. 874, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff in a suit for rent. The case for the plaintiff is that the defendant on the 13th August 1889 executed a kabuliyat in his favour, in which he admitted that he held 7 bighas 15 cottahs of land measured with a rashi of 18 inches a cubit at the annual rental of Rs. 12 3 0. He further agreed that if any excess land was found in his possession, he would pay rent thereof in addition to the aforesaid rental without any objection and neither he nor his heirs would raise any objection thereto. The plaintiff now seeks to recover rent at the rate mentioned in the kabuliyat and also additional rent for excess land, which he alleges is in the occupation of the tenant. The tenant resists the claim on two grounds, namely, first, that the kabuliyat was obtained from him by coercion and was not binding on him ; and secondly, that there was no excess land in his possession for which he was liable to pay additional rent.

The Courts below have dismissed the suit on the authority of the decision in the case of Rajkumar Pratap Sahay v. Ram Lal Singh (1). The Subordinate Judge has held that inspite of this contract between the parties it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove the inception of the tenancy and to establish to the satisfaction of the Court the quantity of land and the rent payable by the defendant at that time. He has further held that as the plaintiff has failed to discharge the onus which lay upon him his suit must fail in so far as the claim relates to excess land. In our opinion this view cannot possibly be supported. The Subordinate Judge has misunderstood the decision of this Court on which he has placed reliance. In that case there was no written contract between the parties, the terms of the tenancy were not known with certainty, and the origin of the tenancy had not been established. There was an entry in the rent receipts to the effect that the rent was paid in respect of an area mentioned. Under these circumstances, the Court held that the plaintiff had failed to prove that there was really any excess land in the possession of the defendant for which he was liable to pay rent. In the case before us, unless the allegation of the defendant as to the circumstances under which the kabuliyat was obtained from him are established, he is bound by its terms and the kabuliyat shows conclusively that he held 7 bighas and 15 cottahs of land measured according to a rashi of 18 inches to the cubit at an annual rental of Rs. 12 3-0. If, upon measurement according to the same standard, it is now established that he holds more than 7 bighas and 15 cottahs of land, he is obviously bound to pay additional rent for the excess area.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the case remanded to him in order that he may raise an issue as to the circumstances under which the kabuliyat was obtained by the plaintiff from the defendant. As the question does not appear to have been properly appreciated at the original trial, the parties will be at liberty to adduce additional evidence, such evidence to be taken by the Subordinate Judge himself or under his direction by the Court of first instance. If the Subordinate Judge finds that the kabuliyat is binding upon the defendant, additional evidence will have to be taken to determine the area now in the occupation of the defendant. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

It is conceded that this judgment will govern the other case (Second Appeal No. 1068 of 1909) which will also be remanded, and the costs will abide the result.

Appeals allowed; Cases remanded.

          - Vappuchi Sahib (Foster-son),
            - Syed Mahomed Kaliba Sahib (P. W. No. 5.)

On one question of fact which was in dispute in this case, namely, whether plaintiff was appointed by his maternal grandfather Syed Peer Mahomad Sahib to the office of Kalibath, I take it that the lower Appellate Court finds against the plaintiff in the negative, and that finding being a finding of fact is binding on us in second appeal. I shall, now assume (without deciding) the validity of the plaintiff's contention that his maternal grandfather, Syed Peer Mahomed Sahib who held Kaliba office till 1913 for more than 30 years, was the full and sole owner of that office at his death and that it was a hereditary office to which Peer Mahomed Sahib's heir was entitled to succeed. On that assumption, the question of Muhammadan Law which arises for decision is, whether the plaintiff (the daughter's son of the last holder of the office) is entitled to inherit it as the nearest kindred or whether the 1st defendant, who is descended from the great-grandfather's great-grandfather of the deceased in the agnate line, as residuary, is the next heir. The plaintiff's contention is that the great grandfather's great-grandfather's descendant is not a residuary heir at all under the Muhammadan Law, it being admitted by him that the residuaries inherit under the Muhammadan Law, in priority to distant kindred. The contention of the appellant is that agnates who are descended from an ancestor more remote than the grandfather's grandfather are not residuaries in their own right according to the Muhammadan Law. So far as the descendants of the grandfather's grandfather are concerned, he is obliged to make the admission that they are residuaries because even the original texts relied on by him (from the Durrul Mukhtar, Sirajiya and Fatawa Alamgiri) do mention the descendants of the grandfather's grandfather as residuaries. As regards the descendants of remoter ancestors, we have got two direct decisions one (so long ago as in 1805) in Shah Ilahi Buksh v. Shah Oasim Ali (1) and the other in Mahomed Haneef v. Mahomed Masoom (2). These decisions interpret the texts of the Muhammadan Law as laying down that agnates, however remote, are entitled to inherit as residuaries in the absence of nearer agnates, that residuary heirship is not confined either to the grandfather's (father's father's) descendants (as argued in some cases) or to grandfather's grandfather's descendants, but extends to the agnate descendants of a "true" grandfather, however high in scale. (In those two cases the right of a person descended from a remoter ancestor than the grandfather's grandfather was upheld. The learned Judges evidently treat the examples given in the texts (which extend only up to the grandfather's paternal uncle's descendants) as merely illustrative and not exhaustive. All the notable text writers including Bailee, Ameer Ali, Sarcar and Wilson (see the table at page 291 of Wilson's Digest, 4th Edition) adopt the same interpretation of the texts. In two decisions of this Court also [Mohidin Ahmid Khan v. Sayyid Muhammad (3) and Indian Jurist, Old Series] the same interpretation is followed. The word 'grandfather' seems to be used to indicate an ancestor in the paternal line, however remote, in the Muhammadan Law books just, as the word "pita maha" in Sanskrit is used to denote even the remotest ancestor of man, Brahma himself. I do not think I am competent to pass criticisms on all the above Muhammadan Law authorities, and the criticisms we have listened to from Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar on them have not satisfied me that they fell into any error in formulating their considered opinions as above. Following them, I hold that the first defendant, though descended from the great-grandfather's grandfather of the propositus, is (as an agnate descended from the nearest ancestor of Peer Mahomed who has left descendants in the male line) to be preferred as Peer Mahomed Sahib's heir to the plaintiff who is only a daughter's son (a cognate) and who comes, therefore, among the inferior class of distant kinsmen. I shall repeat that it is unnecessary to decide whether the Kalibath office was really a hereditary office in the hands of Peer Mahomed, as the plaintiff's suit fails even if it was so. The second appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs, two sets.

The memorandum of objections is dismissed. There will be no costs.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Barisal, dated the 26th February 1916.

Babus Surendra Noth Guha and Pramatha Nath Banerjee, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit for possession of land upon specific performance of an agreement to lease, and, in the alternative, for refund of earnest money. The defendants are proprietors of a newly formed chur which they desired to lease out on the best terms available. The property was accordingly put up to auction and the plaintiff offered the highest bids for rent and premium, namely, Rs. 10 and Rs. 131 per kani respectively. This was accepted by the agent of the defendants on the 20th December 1911, and the following is the material portion of the agreement which was executed by the plaintiff in favour of the defendants on that date:

"Out of whatever amount would be fixed as selami according to the quantity of the land, we do deposit to-day Rs. 200 as earnest money, and within seven days from this date, we shall deposit with the agent at Barisal the balance of one-fourth of the total amount of selami; if we fail to do so, the said sum of Rs. 200 paid as earnest money shall be forfeited to the Sarkar of the Nawab Bahadur without any objection on our part. We shall pay the balance of the selami money to the agent at the time of the execution of the document. We shall pay rent at the said rate of Rs. 10 per kani for whatever land the agent shall, after personal inspection, ascertain as fit for cultivation, and the said agent shall at that inspection settle what rent would be payable for the rest of the land till the same becomes fit for cultivation. Be it also expressed that for whatever land would be reformed in future, we shall pay selami for the same at the said rate of Rs. 131 per kani and shall pay rent at the said full rate of Rs. 10 per kani."

It will be observed that two important elements of the proposed lease were left undetermined: (a) the area of the land to be demised, and (b) the rate of rent for land not yet fit for cultivation.

On the 28th December 1911 the son of the plaintiff appeared before the agent and prayed that the terms previously fixed might be varied by the assessment of a progressive rent, the maximum to be less than Rs. 6 per kani, and also by reduction of the rate of selami. The agent refused to alter the terms, recorded an order to that effect on the petition and added:

"Your father must fulfil the contract. Pay Rs. 1,000 you say you have brought as part of the selami and bring the balance at once." Rs. 1,000 was paid down, but the plaintiff did not otherwise carry out this order and, on the 28th March 1912, the Pleader for the defendants served a notice upon him demanding completion of the contract. The notice added that if the contract was not carried out in a week, the plaintiff would not get a refund of the sum deposited which, according to the written condition, had been forfeited. The notice further contained a threat that the defendants would, if the plaintiff made further default, lease out the land and realise from him any loss that they might thereby suffer. The plaintiff replied to this notice on the 5th April 1912, urged that the default was on the part of the defendants and claimed a refund of the sum of Rs. 1,200 deposited together with compensation for the loss he had sustained. Nothing further happened till the 21st December 1914, when the plaintiff instituted the present suit for specific performance of the contract, or, in the alternative, for refund of the deposit with interest. The defendants repudiated the suggestion that they were in default and pleaded that the plaintiff was not entitled either to specific performance or to refund of the deposit. The Subordinate Judge has refused to decree specific performance on two grounds: (1) the contract was incomplete, as all the material terms had not been determined, and (2) the plaintiff was in default. As regards the alternative claim for refund of the deposit, the Subordinate Judge has held that the first sum of Rs. 200 has been forfeited but that the second sum of Rs. 1,000 can be recovered. He has made a decree accordingly in favour of the plaintiff. On the present appeal by the defendants, it has been argued that the Subordinate Judge should have held that the second sum of Rs. 1,000 also had been forfeited. Stress has further been laid on the damage alleged to have been suffered by the defendants as the result of the breach of contract by the plaintiff. This circumstance, however, is not material, as the defendants did not set up a counter claim for damages, nor did they institute a separate suit for recovery of damages for breach of contract. The only question in controversy, consequently, is whether, in the events which have happened, the second sum of Rs. 1,000 has been forfeited like the first sum of Rs. 200.

The general principle applicable to cases of this character is well settled. The deposit, unless paid on any special terms, is not merely part payment but is an earnest: so that, on the one hand, if the contract be performed, it is brought into account as part payment: on the other hand, if the purchaser make default, it may be retained by the vendor. The deposit is, from this point of view, a security for the performance of the purchaser's part of the contract; or, as Lord Macnaghten observed in Soper v. Arnold (1), "the deposit serves two purposes —if the purchase is carried out it goes against the purchase-money—but its primary purpose is this, it is a guarantee that the purchaser means business." The test in each case, thus, is, did the parties mutually agree, expressly or by implication, that the sum paid was to be treated, not merely as part payment, but as a guarantee for due performance of the contract.

But as Lord Denman, C. J., put it in Palmer v. Temple (2), "In the absence of any specific provision, the question whether the deposit is forfeited, depends on the intent of the parties to be collected from the whole instrument." The nature and incidents of such a deposit are accurately discussed in the case of Howe v. Smith (3), which was approved by the Judicial Committee in Sprague v. Booth (4), where the rule was affirmed that if the payment is a deposit, it is forfeited in the event of default by the purchaser. A similar view is supported by the decisions in Depree v. Bedborough (5), Collins v. Stimson (6), Levy v. Stogdon (7), and Hall v. Burnell (8). The decision in Depree v. Bedborough (5) indicates that where the purchaser makes default, no express stipulation is necessary to entitle the vendor to the deposit, and the decision in Hall v. Burnell (8) shows that the principle is applicable in the absence of any express stipulation to the contrary in the contract. This is confirmed by the statement of Fry, L. J., in Howe v. Smith (3): "The terms most naturally to be implied appear to me, in the case of money paid on the signing of a contract, to be that in the event of the contract being performed, it shall be brought into account, but if the contract is not performed by the payer, it shall remain the property of the payer. It is not merely a part payment, but is then also an earnest to bind the bargain so entered into, and creates by the fear of its forfeiture a motive in the payer to perform the rest of the contract." To the same effect is the observation of Cotton, L. J., that the deposit is a guarantee that the contract shall be performed, and the remark of Bowen, L. J., that the deposit, if nothing more is said about it, is, according to the ordinary interpretation of businessmen, a security for the completion of the purchase. This is in conformity to the earlier decision in Barrell, Ex parte; Parnell In re (9).

It does not follow, however, that every payment made by the purchaser to the vendor is in the nature of a deposit and is liable to be forfeited, if the purchaser violates his contract: Cornwall v. Henson (10), where Webster, M. R., doubted whether the doctrine of Howe v. Smith (3) would apply to a case where the purchase-money was payable in instalments and all but the last instalment had been paid; in such a case, the question might well arise whether the rights of the parties must not be adjusted upon the footing of a restitutio ad integrum. See also Gee v. Pearse(11). These rules have been repeatedly applied in this country as based on principles of justice, equity and good conscience: Raghu Nath Sahai v. Chandra Protap Singh (12), Bishan Chand v. Radha Kishan Das (13), Balvanta v. Bira (14), Roshan Lal v. Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. Ltd. (15) and Natesa Iyer v. Appavu Padayachi (16). We may add that though all the decisions in the books may not be easy to reconcile, there is no substantial difference as to the principle, though there may be room for divergence of opinion as to the true nature of the payment in a particular case and the mutual intention of the parties with regard thereto. This is well illustrated by Natesa Aiyar v. Appavu Padayachi (17), and what is incumbent upon the Court in each case is to ascertain the real intention of the parties from all the terms of the contract: Dagenham Thames Dock Co., In re, Hulse Ex parte (18).

Let us test the case before us, in the light of these principles. The terms of the contract were reduced to writing on the 20th December 1911 and Rs. 200 was paid by the intending lessee to the agent of the lessors as earnest money. He agreed to pay the balance of one-fourth within seven days and the condition was annexed that if the balance was not so paid, the sum of Rs. 200 paid as earnest money would be forfeited. The balance was not paid as agreed and the result followed automatically that the deposit of Rs. 200 was forfeited. But it is argued on behalf of the defendants that the same fate should be imposed upon the sum of Rs. 1,000 paid after the Rs. 200 had been forfeited. The obvious answer is that the parties, if they had so chosen, might have made a provision to that effect; the forfeiture clause was made applicable in terms only to the sum which had been paid at the date of the contract and there is nothing to indicate that the parties intended to give it a wider operation. The agent of the defendants may have thought when he received Rs. 1,000 that if further payment was not made, the sum should be forfeited, but clearly there was no mutual intention, expressed or implied that the second payment was to be deemed a guarantee deposit. The contract gives the lessors an express right of forfeiture on non-performance of the contract or non-observance of its conditions, and there is no reason why this express right should be enlarged in its operation by an appeal to the general rule that where the contract goes off by default of the purchaser, the vendor is entitled to retain the deposit. The position is different where there is no express clause of forfeiture, but simply a payment by way of deposit which implies a liability to forfeiture. We are of opinion that the defendants are not entitled to retain the sum of Rs. 1,000.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at three gold mohurs.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 386 OF 1918.

MULLATHA MEENAKSHI AMMA'S DAUGHTER KUNHAMMA AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANTS NOS. 1, 5 AND 6—RESPONDENTS.

The junior members of a tavazhi are liable for a debt on a pro-note executed by the karnavan for current tavazhi expenses. The creditor can sue both the karnavan and the other members of the tavazhi and obtain a decree against all. [p. 881, col. 1.]

An acknowledgment or payment by the manager, though not expressly stated to have been made or signed as manager, saves limitation also as against the junior members. [p. 881, col. 1.]

The authority to sign an acknowledgment under section 19 of the Limitation Act need not be expressly given by the parties sought to be made liable. The agency to sign can follow from the act of the Court or from rules of statutory or partnership law or the personal law of the parties. [p. 881, col. 2.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—When a promissory note is executed for money borrowed at the time of the execution of the note itself, the creditor cannot join two separate causes of action in the same suit on two independent heads of claim, namely, one based on the borrowing of the money the instant before the execution of the promissory note, and the other on the promissory note itself. Having regard to section 91 of the Evidence Act, two distinct causes of action do not vest in such cases in the creditor. [p. 880, col. 1.]

Per Spencer, J.—On the pleadings in the case, the suit was based on the liability for the debt as evidenced by the promissory note. [p. 881, col. 2.]

A manager of a joint family or tarwad can acknowledge liability on behalf of the members whom he represents so as to extend the period of limitation against them as well as against himself. [p. 882, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the judgment and decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Malabar, dated 10th January 1918, in Small Cause Suit No. 1043 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K Kutti Krishna Menon, for the Petitioner.—The suit was on the promissory note executed by the manager. He did not statedly incur liability as manager. The lower Court erred in giving a decree against all the members of the Tavazhi. See Govindan Nair v. Nanu Menon (1).

There is no finding that the Tavazhi was under any necessity to contract debts.

The creditor has elected to sue on the promissory note and not on the antecedent debt for which the pro-note was executed. On the pro-note the executant only is liable.

The acknowledgment by the manager, i. e., the endorsement of payment on the pro-note in her writing, will only save limitation as against her. She has not signed the endorsement as manager. The suit is barred as against the other defendants.

Mr. P. S. Narayanaswami Aiyar, for the Respondent.—The manager has the power to contract or create a debt for the Tavazhi. The pro note was executed for current Tavazhi expenses. The decree against all the members is a proper decree. See Nachiappa Chetty v. Dakshinamurthi Servai (2), Ayyasamy Pillai v. Gurusami Naicken (3), Nataraja Naicken v. Ayyasami Pillai (4).

The creditor cannot sue on two separate causes of action. The suit must be regarded as based not only on the pro note but also on the liability of family members, under Hindu Law, for debts incurred for the family by the manager.

The Sub-Judge has found that the debt was contracted for purposes of the Tavazhi. That means for necessary purposes.

The acknowledgment by the manager need not state that it was made as manager. Chinnya Nayudu v. Gurunatham Chetti (5). The effect is to extend the period of limitation even as against the other members.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 are the petitioners in revision. They are junior members of a Tavazhi, of which the 1st defendant was the manager. As such manager, she borrowed Rs. 100 in cash for Tavazhi expenses and executed a promissory note in her own handwriting to the plaintiff on the 18th February 1914 A suit was brought against her and the other members of the Tavazhi, the plaint alleging that the money was borrowed under the promissory note for the necessities of the Tavazhi. The Subordinate Judge on the Small Cause side gave a decree against the 1st defendant and also against the other defendants to the extent of their interest in the Tavazhi properties. Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 urge in their grounds of the revision petition, (1) that under the ruling in Govindan Nair v. Nanu Menon (1) the lower Court erred in giving a decree against the Tavazhi as the suit was solely based on the promissory note, (2) that the lower Court has not found that the Tavazhi had a necessity to borrow. (There are other grounds which raise questions of fact, which it is not usual in revision petitions to consider).

As regards the first point, there was a preliminary argument addressed on the question whether, when a promissory note is executed for money borrowed at the time of the execution of the promissory note itself, the creditor can bring two separate suits or put forward two separate causes of action in the same suit on two independent heads of claim, namely, one based on the borrowing of the money the instant before the execution of the promissory note and the other on the promissory note itself. In Muthu Sastrigal v. Viswanatha Pandara Sannadhi(6) see also the decision in Ammalu Ammal v. Namagiri Ammal (7)] I expressed the opinion that, having regard to section 91 of the Indian Evidence Act, two distinct causes of action did not vest in such cases in the creditor. In Shanmuganatha Chettiar v. Srinivasa Aiyar (8) Abdur Rahim, J., basing himself on the decision of the Privy Council in Karmali Abdulla v. Bora Karimji (9), held that the creditor has the right to put forward the two claims independently of one another. With the greatest respect I venture to think that their Lordships of the Privy Council were not considering this question in Karmali Abdulla v. Bora Karimji (9) but a different question, namely, whether other partners were liable on bills drawn by one of the partners for debts incurred by him in the carrying on the partnership business of purchasing brown sugar at Mauritius for shipment to and sale at Hongkong. Their Lordships say expressly at pages 274 and 275* that "the Indian Contract Act" "rules parties in this case," and the question was "whether the transaction is or is not a partnership transaction" and that "it is erroneous to treat the question as purely a question of liability on the bills," just as it is erroneous in the present case to treat the suit as one solely on the promissory note and not also on the Hindu Law liability of the Tavazhi for a promissory note debt incurred by its manager in respect of a family transaction within her powers. I might add that in the decision in Nachiappa Chetty v. Dakshinamurthy Servai (2), a case decided after the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Karmali Abdulla v Bora Karimji (9), the learned Chief Justice has the following observation :—"This way of putting it does not take account of the decisions that where the debt and the promissory note came into existence at one and the same time, the maker must be sued on the promissory note and not on the original cause of action." This observation indicates that in the opinion of my Lord, the Chief Justice, there is only one cause of action, after the promissory note was executed (for a contemporaneous borrowing), on which a suit could be brought. I might also refer to the decisions of Coutts Trotter, J., in Ayyasamy Pillai v. Gurusami Naicken (3) and of Ayling and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ., in Nataraja Naicken v Ayyasami Pillai (4), which indicate that the claim based on the rules of Hindu Law and made against persons other than the maker of the promissory note arises along with and as a result of the execution of the promissory note by the managing member. So also in the Full Bench decision in Krishna Ayyar v. Krishnasami Ayyar (10),

*Pages of 39 B.—Ed.

Subrahmania Aiyar, J., clearly bases his decision on the ground that the debt created by the promissory note itself ipso facto creates the obligation on the other members of the family under the Hindu Law, and not that their obligation is created by any antecedent independent debt which existed before the promissory note was executed.

Then the next question is whether the decision in Govindan Nair v. Nanu Menon (1) precludes the Court from giving a decree against the other members of the Tavazhi even if the debt has been incurred by the Karnavan for purposes binding on the Tavazhi. This decision in Govindn Nair v. Nanu Menon (1) has been clearly explained by the learned Chief Justice, who was a party to it, in his judgment in Nochiappa Chetty v. Dakshinamurthy Servai (2). He there points out that the decision in Govindan Nair v. Nanu Menon (1) was based on the fact that the plaintiff in that case neither alleged in his plaint nor proved by his evidence facts indicating that, by the Marumakkathayam Law, the other members of the Tavazhi were bound by the debt of the manager. On the other hand, the decision in Nachiappa Chetty v. Dakshinamurthy Servai (2) and the decisions in Ayyasamy Pillai v. Gurusami Naicken (3) and Nataraja Naicken v. Ayyasami Pillai (4) impose liability on the other members of the Tarwad or the joint family on the promissory note executed by the Karnavan or the manager (as the case may be) for proper debts.

The next point argued by Mr. Kutti Krishna Menon for the petitioners (though I do not find it raised in the grounds of the revision petition) was that the suit was barred by limitation as against the other members of the Tavazhi, because the payment towards the principal and interest made by the 1st defendant and endorsed on the promissory note in her writing and over her signature does not purport to be made by her as manager of the Tavazhi. I think that the matter is concluded by the Full Bench decision in Chinnaya Nayudu v. Gurunatham Chetti (5), where it was held that the managing member has got a right to create debts and to make payment towards debts. Just as it is unnecessary that the document creating the original liability should purport to be signed by the executant as manager [see on this point the decision in Padma Krishna Chettiar v. Nagamani Ammal (11)], it is likewise unnecessary that the manager, when making payments or signing endorsements, should expressly state that he or she pays or signs as manager. If the decision in Parakutty Amma v. Kunhi Krishnan Nair (12) quoted by Mr. Kutti Krishnan Menon holds otherwise, I regret (with great respect) that I am unable to follow it. That the authority to sign an acknowledgment under section 19 of the Limitation Act need not be expressly given by the parties sought to be made liable and that the agency to sign can follow from the act of the Court or from rules of statutory or partnership law or the personal law of the defendant has been established by the case-law discussed fully in Lakshumanan Chetty v. Padayappa Chetty (13) in the judgment of Abdur Rahim, J.

Then on the question that there is no finding by the Subordinate Judge that there was necessity to borrow, I think that his finding that the debt was contracted for purposes of the Tavazhi is only another way of saying that it was for the necessary expenses of the Tavazhi that the debt was incurred.

I would, therefore, dismiss the revision petition with costs.

SPENCER, J.—On the pleadings in the Small Cause suit, I am of opinion that the suit was based on the liability for the debt as evidenced by the promissory note of 18th February 1914 signed by 1st defendant, the manager of the defendant's Tavazhi.

Paragraph 5 of the plaint and paragraph 2 of the written statement raised the question whether the debt was contracted for the necessity of the members of the Tavazhi and the Subordinate Judge has decided the issue arising out of this question in the plaintiff's favour.

The petitioners' Vakil relies on the decisions in Govindan Nair v Nanu Menon (1) in support of his contention that the defendants' Tavazhi is not liable. That suit was based solely upon the promissory note and not upon the original cause of action. It is expressly so stated in the judgment. I would distinguish that case from the present upon that ground. In Nachiappa Chetty v. Dakshinamurthi Servai (2) the learned Chief Justice in following the decision in Krishna Ayyar v. Krishnasami Ayyar (10) found no difficulty in so distinguishing the decision in Govindan Nair v. Nanu Menon (1) to which he was a party.

The decision of Coutts Trotter, J., in Ayyasamy Pillai v Guruswami Naicken (3) and the decision of a Bench in Nataraja Naicken v. Ayyaswami Pillai (4), in which his decision was confirmed, are exactly to the point on the question raised in this civil revision petition. The cases of partnership which have been quoted in the arguments have not, to my mind, much bearing upon this point as liabilities of partners are governed not by Hindu Law but by sections 249 and 251 of the Indian Contract Act.

On the question whether the 1st defendant's payment of Rs. 23 on the 17th February 1917 which was certified over her signature had the effect of extending the limitation as against the other defendants, I think that the decision in Chinnaya Nayudu v. Gurunatham Chetti (5) and that in Sarodi Charan Chuckerbutty v. Durga Ram De Sinha (14) are conclusive as showing that a manager can acknowledge liability of the members of the family which he or she represent so as to extend the period of limitation against them as well as against himself or herself.

I agree with my learned brother in holding that the civil revision petition shall be dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

MAHADEB RAM—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2—Execution of decree—Consent decree—Application by judgment-debtor intimating to Court that the terms of the decree have been performed, nature of—Decree-holder, remedy of.

A consent decree provided that the defendant-judgment-debtor should deliver to the plaintiff a parcel of land and should raise a wall within a time specified in the decree. The decree further provided that the defendant, as soon as he had carried out the terms of the decree, should notify that fact to the Court. Within the specified time the defendant made an application intimating to the Court that he had complied with the terms of the decree. The application was received but no action was taken upon it:

Held, (1) that the application of the defendant did not fall under Order XXI, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code; [p. 883, col. 2.]

(2) that if the defendant had not faithfully carried out the terms of the decree, the proper course for the plaintiff was to apply for execution of the decree and the Court would then consider whether the terms of the decree had been carried out. [p. 883, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Cuttack, dated the 4th December 1911, reversing that of the Munsif, Puri, dated the 8th July 1911.

Babu Narendra Kumar Bose, for the Appellant.

Babu Surendra Nath Ghosal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order made apparently under Order XXI, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. On the 14th September 1910, a consent decree was made between the parties to this appeal. Under that decree the respondent, who was the defendant in the suit, undertook to deliver to the plaintiff-appellant, within seven days, a parcel of land and to raise a wall within the 14th January 1911. The decree further provided that if the defendant failed to carry out the terms of the decree, the plaintiff would be at liberty to execute the decree. The decree further stated that the defendant, as soon as he had carried out the terms of the decree, would notify the fact to the Court. On the 12th January 1911 the defendant intimated to the Court that he had complied with the terms of the decree. This application was received but no action was taken upon it. On the 17th February 1911 the Pleader for the plaintiff discovered that this application had been made and he forthwith preferred objections. On the next day, the Court directed notices to issue upon the plaintiff as well as the defendant and fixed the case for disposal on the 4th March 1911. On that date, the defendant did not appear and his application was dismissed. On the 4th April 1911 the defendant renewed his application with an express prayer that satisfaction might be entered in the decree under rule 2 of Order XXI of the Code. This was opposed by the plaintiff and the result was that the Court on the 8th July 1911 dismissed the application as barred by Order IX, rule 9. The defendant thereupon appealed, and the District Judge on the 4th December held that the second application was not barred. In this view, he remanded the case in order that the truth of the allegation of the defendant might be investigated. The present appeal is directed against that order. On behalf of the appellant it has been contended, first, that the second application is not maintainable, and secondly, that, if maintainable, it is barred by limitation under Article 174 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act. In our opinion, there is no substance in either of these contentions and that the proceedings have been throughout misconceived. The application of the 12th January 1911 was not an application under rule 2, sub-rule (1) of Order XXI, which provides that where any money payable under a decree of any kind is paid out of Court or the decree is otherwise adjusted in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree-holder, the decree-holder shall certify such payment or adjustment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree, and the Court shall record the same accordingly. Even if it could be said in this case that there was an adjustment of the decree, it was not alleged by the defendant judgment-debtor that there was an adjustment either in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree holder, and his application of the 12th January 1911 was not an application under sub rule (2) of rule 2 for issue of notice to the decree-holder to show cause why the adjustment should not be recorded as certified. The defendant was bound by the decree to notify to the Court that he had carried out its terms, and this he did. He did not invite the Court to take any action, and, as we have seen, no action was taken till the Pleader of the plaintiff discovered that the application had been made. In our opinion, the application is clearly not one under sub rule 2 of rule 2 of Order XXI and no action ought to have been taken thereon. The proper course for the plaintiff is to apply for execution of the decree, if his case is that the terms of the decree have not been faithfully carried out by the defendant. If such application is made, it will be open to the defendant to show that he has, as a matter of fact, carried out the terms of the decree. The Court will then be in a position to consider whether the terms of the decree have been carried out. We are informed that an application for execution was presented but was struck off by reason of the pendency of the appeal in this Court. If that is so, it will be open to the plaintiff to apply for revival of that application and proceedings may be taken on the basis of the application so revived or of a fresh application for execution.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the orders of both the Courts below are discharged. Under the circumstances, each party will pay his own costs throughout the litigation.

Musammat PALI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Appeal—Appellate Court, whether can set aside decree which has not been appealed against—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 33.

A Court cannot in the course of the decision of an appeal from one decree set aside a decree which dismisses a separate suit and has not been appealed against [p. 884, col. 2]

P. sued G. to recover possession of certain land previously sold by her to the defendant, alleging fraud and undue influence. With regard to the same sale three other suits were also brought, one by a collateral of the last male holder for a declaration to protect her reversionary rights and two by rival pre-emptors. The first Court gave P. a decree and dismissed the other three suits G. appealed, while the plaintiffs in the other suits did not prefer any appeal. In the course of the appeal P. and G. put in a compromise, according to which G. was to obtain half the land on payment of a certain sum of money. Thereupon the District Judge added the plaintiffs in the other three suits and ordered that those suits be re-opened and re-tried. G. preferred a second appeal:

Held, that the order of the District Judge was incorrect and that the suits could not be re-opened.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 1st February 1918, varying that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 9th October 1917, decreeing the suit in favour of Musammat Pali, plaintiff, with costs and dismissing the remaining plaintiffs' suit without costs.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Jagan Nath and Mr. Behari Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Musammat Pali, widow of Mutsaddi, sold the land in suit to Gobind Ram on the 14th of May 1915 for Rs. 1,990. Four suits were subsequently brought

(1) by Musammat Pali, who sued to recover possession, alleging fraud and undue influence;

(2) by Musammat Surasti, daughter of a collateral of Mutsaddi, who sued for a declaration to protect her reversionary rights, alleging want of consideration and necessity;

(3) by Asa Ram, who sued to pre-empt; and

(4) by Durga and Dheru, who also sued to pre-empt.

The first Court gave Musammat Pali a decree and dismissed the other three suits. The plaintiffs who were unsuccessful in the first Court did not appeal and so the decrees dismissing their suits became final. Against the decree obtained by Musammat Pali Gobind Ram preferred an appeal to the District Judge. Then Gobind Ram and Musammat Pali put in a compromise, according to which Gobind Ram was to pay Musammat Pali Rs. 1,990 and take half the land. On this the learned District Judge remarked that as the other plaintiffs had had their suits dismissed merely because Musammat Pali had been given a decree, their cases should be re opened now that Musammat Pali had compromised with Gobind Ram. He accordingly added them as parties to the appeal brought by Gobind Ram and then, passing a decree as between Musammat Pali and Gobind Ram in the terms of the compromise, ordered that the three suits brought by Musammat Surasti, Asa Ram and Durga and Dheru should be re opened and retried by the lower Court, these plaintiffs being allowed to amend their plaints so as to meet the new circumstances introduced by the compromise. Gobind Ram appeals.

I think the course adopted by the learned District Judge is quite incorrect. Had Gobind Ram's appeal succeeded on the merits, I do not see that this would have been any good ground for re-opening the other three suits. Musammat Surasti, Asa Ram and Durga must have been aware that it was open to Gobind Ram to appeal against the decree obtained by Musammat Pali and that that decree might be reversed or modified by the Appellate Court. Therefore, if they wished to be on the safe side, they should have appealed merely as a matter of precaution. I am unaware of any provision of law which enables a Court in the course of the decision of an appeal from one decree to set aside the decree which dismisses a separate suit and which has not been appealed against. If Musammat Surasti, Asa Ram and Durga have any remedy now open to them, I think it must be by way of fresh separate suits, though I cannot, of course, attempt to offer any opinion as to whether any fresh suits will lie. The learned District Judge says in his order:—

"The compromise read with the original sale deed will be regarded as a new contract between Musammat Pali and Gobind Ram." As to this I can only say that it would be premature at this stage to decide any issue likely to arise in any future suits which may or may not be brought.

I accept this appeal and while upholding the decree of the lower Appellate Court passed in terms of the compromise between Musammat Pali and Gobind Ram, I reverse so much of the learned District Judge's order as re opens the three suits in which Musammat Surasti, Asa Ram and Durga and Dheru were plaintiffs. The order of the first Court dismissing these three suits will stand. The circumstances are peculiar and I pass no order as to costs in this Court. Musammat Surasti, Asa Ram and Durga and Dheru will bear their own costs in the District Judge's Court, and as ordered by the first Court, they will also bear their own costs in that Court.

Appeal accepted.

Bequests to an idol to be established in future are not invalid in Hindu Law. [p. 886, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, 24 Pergannas, dated the 5th August 1915, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of that district, dated the 9th April 1914.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babu Khitish Chandra Chakraverty, for the Appellants.

Babus Ram Chandra Majumdar and Dwijendra Nath Mukherjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant against the decision of the Additional District Judge of the 24-Pergannas, dated the 5th August 1915, modifying the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Alipur, dated the 9th April 1914.

It is necessary to state before dealing with the contentions raised by the appellant a few material facts. On the 29th January 1907 one Suresh Chandra Ganguly made his Will and thereby, inter alia, dedicated the bulk of his properties to an idol which he might thereafter establish or which might be established after his death at Benares. In his Will he made provision for the five sons of his two daughters named Keshab, Gopal, Bankim, Khetra and Mritunjoy. Suresh died on the 7th February 1907, and on the 19th November 1907 Probate of his Will was granted to Satis Chandra Sen, the executor named in the Will. Satis died on the 30th January 1908 and Keshab, one of the five grandsons, commenced a suit in 1908 for the construction of his grandfather's Will, for the administration of the estate so far as necessary and for partition. In that suit it was held in accordance with the law as it then stood, that the gift under the testator's Will to an idol to be established thereafter was not a valid gift in Hindu Law, and accordingly on the 5th September 1908 a preliminary decree for partition was passed. On the 15th July 1908 prior to that decree two of the grandsons, Keshab and Bankim, mortgaged to one Sukhilal for Rs. 3,500 their shares in their grandfather's estate, which in accordance with the construction of the Will which had been declared consisted inter alia of the property which the testator had dedicated for the purpose of the idol to be established at Benares. On the 29th September 1908 Keshab and Bankim mortgaged their shares to one Nagendra Nath Mitter for Rs. 6,000, the mortgage of Sukhilal being paid off out of the mortgage money. In August 1909, the decision of the Full Bench* was promulgated which declared that bequests to an idol to be established in future were not invalid in Hindu Law. On the 27th September 1909 Nagendra Nath Mitter assigned his mortgage to one Harendra Nath Mukherjee, who was the father of the appellant. On the 25th February 1910 the suit for partition was withdrawn in view of the decision of the Full Bench of August 1909. On the 15th May 1908 Government published a notification for the acquisition of $15\frac{1}{2}$ cottas of land which formed part of the testator's estate. The award was published on the 7th August 1908 awarding 1/5th of the compensation money to Gopal, testator's grandson, 2/5ths to the other grandsons, Khetra and Mritunjoy, and the remaining 2/5ths to Keshab and Bankim.

Harendra obtained a decree upon his mortgage and on the 18th March 1910, he attached 2/5ths share in the compensation money belonging to Keshab and Bankim in accordance with the award which amounted to Rs. 2,163, and shortly after Harendra withdrew this sum. On the 19th May 1910 administration de bonis non of the testator's estate was granted to the present plaintiff. There was an appeal but the grant was confirmed on appeal.

*See Bhupati Nath Smrititirtho v. Ram Lal Mitra, 3 Ind. Cas. 612; 37 C. 128; 14 C. W. N. 18; 10 C. L. J. 355 (F. B.)—Ed.

KALLAN v. MOHAMMAD MIR.

On the 7th August 1912, Harendra commenced a suit to enforce payment of the balance due to him under the mortgage, and it was held in that suit that the mortgage-debt was realizable from the amount bequeathed to the mortgagees, Bankim and Keshab, under their grandfather's Will. On the 17th March 1913 the present suit was instituted by the plaintiff to recover the sum of Rs. 2,163 from the defendants, being the money withdrawn by their father under the attachment of the 18th March 1910.

Three points are urged before us on appeal. First, it is said that the original mortgagee and his assignees had no notice of the debutter character of the estate when the original mortgage was entered into. Secondly, it is said that as the law stood at the date of the mortgage the mortgage was a good mortgage and was of secular and not of debutter property, and thirdly, it is urged that the plaintiff had no cause of action against the present defendants as Harendra's heirs, as Harendra obtained the sum of Rs. 2,163 not from the testator's estate but from Bankim and Keshab, and it is said that the plaintiff's cause of action, if any, is against the cestui que trust under the Will of Suresh. Lastly, it was urged that this is not a case of trust money which is ear-marked and which can be recovered.

So far as the first contention is concerned, it seems to us that there is nothing in this. No question of bona fide purchaser for value or any similar question arises. By the Will of Suresh such portion of his estate as was dedicated to the idol to be established at Benares was impressed with a trust for that purpose.

Then so far as the second point is concerned, the learned Vakil for the appellant does not really contest that the effect of the Full Bench decision was not to make a new law but was to declare the law as it stood and has always stood, and so far as the third contention is concerned and also the last contention to which I have referred, it appears to us that on the 18th March 1910 when the sum of money was withdrawn by Harendra, this was money to the knowledge of all the world, by virtue of the decision of the Full Bench, impressed with a trust for religious purposes.

Under these circumstances we think that the decision of the Additional District Judge was correct and this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, Expl. VI—Suit on behalf of community in respect of a public right—Parties interested, subsequent suit by—Matter directly and substantially in issue—Res judicata.

Plaintiff sued on behalf of himself and the Muhammadan community for a declaration to the effect that the land sold by defendant No. 1 to defendant No. 2 was waqf and that the sale-deed was null and void. It appeared that in 1888 plaintiff on behalf of himself and the Muhammadan community had brought a similar suit against defendant No. 1 and one I:

Held, (1) that Explanation VI to section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code was applicable to the case and it could not be contended that the parties to the two suits were not the same; [p. 887, col. 2]

(2) that the question whether the area in dispute was waqf or not was directly and substantially in issue in the earlier suits, and having been adjudicated upon could not be re-opened. [p. 888, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 22nd December 1918, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Delhi, dated the 1st June 1918, decreeing the plaintiffs' claim.

Messrs. W. B. O'Connor, Cooper and Badr-ud Din Kureshi, for the Appellant.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., and Dr. Mohammad Iqbal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment will cover Appeals Nos. 563, 627, and 623 of 1919. Appeal Nos. 566 and 627 arise out of a suit, No. 74 of 1917, and are separate appeals by two defendants. Suit No. 74 of 1917 was by S. Mohammad Mir and others on behalf of the Mohammadan community against Muzaffar Ali Khan and Kallan, the present appellants, for a declaration that two sales by Muzaffar Ali Khan to Kallan were void on the ground that the land sold was part of a graveyard and was waqf.

The suit originally related to three sales and was valued at Rs. 1,200 but, apparently, to enable the plaintiffs to avail themselves of the plea of res judicata one sale was abandoned and the plaint was amended and limited to two sales, whereby the value of the suit was reduced to Rs. 750.

Appeal No. 623 arises out of Suit No. 129 of 1917 which was instituted by S. Mohammad Mir on behalf of himself and the Mohammadan community against Muzaffar Ali Khan alone. This suit was for an injunction restraining the defendant from doing any acts against the interests of the Mohammadans in the graveyard either by alienating the land, building thereon or otherwise.

In Suit No 74 the case for the plaintiffs was that the land sold by Muzaffar Ali Khan was part of a larger area of 43,620 square yards which was waqf and which consisted of a dargah, or shrine, and land attached to it which was a graveyard. The defence was that the whole of this area was not waqf property, that some 2,000 square yards of land was waqf property and that the remainder was the private property of Muzaffar Ali Khan, of which he had already sold part, and that the portion sold to Kallan was his private property.

On the 30th May 1917 in the course of the proceedings Muzaffar Ali Khan made an important statement, in which he admitted that the area in dispute was 43,620 square yards. He also alleged that originally he had been owner of the whole land but that part of it had become a graveyard and urged that no one could be buried in the land without his permission and without payment or purchase.

He also admitted that the whole of the land which was in dispute was shown in the revenue papers in 1863 as Government land.

The first Court decided both suits in favour of the plaintiffs, on the ground that the matter was res judicata by virtue of a suit, No. 46 of 1888. The defendants appealed in both the cases, which appeals were dismissed by the lower Appellate Court, that Court agreeing with the decision of the first Court. The defendants, therefore, now appeal to this Court.

The only point for decision is whether the two suits are barred by res judicata as found by the lower Courts. For this purpose it is necessary to compare Suit No. 46 of 1888 with the present suits. In the 1888 suit the parties were S. Mohammad Mir on behalf of himself and the Mohammadan community against Ibrahim Ali and Muzaffar Ali Khan, whilst in Suit No. 74 of 1917 the parties are S. Mohammad Mir and three others on behalf of the Mohammadan community plaintiffs and Muzaffar Ali Khan and Kallan defendants. In Suit No. 129 of 1917 S. Mohammad Mir on behalf of himself and the Mohammadan community is the plaintiff and Muzaffar Ali Khan the defendant. Mr. Muharram Ali Chishti on behalf of Muzaffar Ali Khan urges that inasmuch as the parties are not the same, section 11, Civil Procedure Code, is not applicable but this contention is untenable. Kallan is a purchaser from Muzaffar Ali Khan and explanation 6 to section 11, Civil Procedure Code, also makes the point clear. I, therefore, overrule this contention.

The facts in the 1888 suit were that the defendant Ibrahim Ali had purchased a part of the graveyard from Muzaffar Ali Khan and had buried his wife there and had also enclosed with a wall certain existing graves and that the construction of that wall had injured other graves, including that of the father of the plaintiff. The case for the plaintiff was that the dargah, with the land attached to it, on which there were a large number of graves and which, including the shrines, measured 11 bighas, 1 biswas, was waqf property and that Muzaffar Ali Khan had no right to sell any portion of it and that Ibrahim Ali had no right to do the acts complained of. The defendant Muzaffar Ali Khan pleaded that he was the mutwalli of the dargah, that the land connected with the dargah and used as a cemetery was not waqf, that the land had been gifted by the Emperor Jahangir to his ancestors and that from the time of the gift it had remained the property, and in possession, of his family, that he had the right to alienate the property for the purposes and safety of the tombs only and not for any dwelling purposes and that in accordance with the usage prevalent in other cemeteries in Delhi land measuring $2\frac{1}{4}$ yards by $1\frac{1}{2}$ yards was sold by him at the rate of Rs. 40 to persons desiring to bury their dead.

The first issue in the suit was "whether the land of the cemetery of the dargah where lies the disputed place is waqf or private property." The Court decided the first issue in favour of the plaintiff and held that the dargah including cemetry, etc., i.e., the whole area of 11 bighas 11 biswas was waqf property. The first issue in Suit No. 74 of 1917 is:—"Is the land in dispute (i. e., the whole 43,620 yards) a qabristan and was expressly made waqf for the purpose." Issue No. 2 is:—"Is the land wholly or partially waqf by reason of its being used as qabristan for the public, and if partially, how much." The Suits Nos. 74 and 129 were practically consolidated and these were the issues in both of those suits. It is urged by both Mr. O'Connor for Kallan and Mr. Moharram Ali Chishti for Mazaffar Ali Khan that the areas in dispute in the 1888 suit and in the present suit are not shown to be identical and whereas the actual area of 1888 was a plot of 21 feet by 22 feet, in Suit No. 74 of 1917 the two plots make a total of 300 square yards. Now the suit in 1888 related to khasra No. 399 measuring 11 bighas 11 biswas and a gosha of 14 biswas, making a total of 12 bighas 3 biswas; and the settlement papers, which were then produced, show that it is one large plot including a dargah or shrine and a masjid.

In his application in the present suits the plaintiff asks for a map to be prepared of khasra No. 399 by the qanungo. Both parties had maps prepared of the total area in dispute, and Muzaffar Ali Khan admitted in Court that the plan of the plaintiff agreed with his plan in general form and outlines. Muzaffar Ali Khan also admitted, as I have already pointed out, that the area in dispute had been entered in the revenue papers in 1866 as Government property. This is khasra No. 399. There is, in my opinion, no doubt whatever that the issue in the 1888 case and in the present cases with regard to the total area claimed by the plaintiff as waqf is the same and that the specific plots now sold were included in the first issue in the 1888 case. We have now to see whether the decision of the issues with regard to the total area being waqf or not was directly and substantially in issue in all these suits or whether the matter arose only incidentally In my opinion the matter whether this total area was waqf or not is directly and substantially in issue in the present cases and was directly and substantially in issue in the 1888 case. It was necessary to decide this point before the rights of the parties with regard to the smaller areas actually in suit could be ascertained and settled. Mr. Muharram Ali Chishti has referred me to a number of rulings, some of which have been dealt with in Babu Lal v. Hari Bukhsh (1) and some are not in point. It is unnecessary to deal with each and all of them. Narain Das v. Faiz Shah (2) relied on by him is clearly against him. It is doubtful whether the appellants can take the objection that the property in the former and the present suits is different. This was not specifically urged in the lower Courts in the sense that the total areas dealt with were not the same. The other requirements of section 11, Civil Procedure Code, have been complied with. The Court which tried the 1888 suit was competent to try the subsequent suit and the decision on issue No. 1 in the 1888 suit was upheld on appeal.

In his reply Mr. Muharram Ali Chishti has endeavoured to raise a new point for the first time to the effect that the injunction in so far as it restrains building cannot be res judicata, but this matter cannot be gone into at this stage.

For the above reasons I dismiss all three appeals with costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 73, applicability of, to breaches of contract concerning immovable property —Damages, measure of.

Though the illustrations to section 73 of the Contract Act refer mainly to breaches of contract with regard to movables, there is nothing in the wording of the section itself which would indicate that it is not applicable to contracts dealing with immovable property. A party who suffers from any such breach is entitled to recover from the party responsible for the breach compensation for any loss or damage caused to him thereby which naturally arises in the usual course of things from such breach.

Application against the order of the Sub-Judge, Partabgarh, dated the 23rd July 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, Kunda, dated the 7th April 1919.

Mr. Basudeo Lal, for the Applicant.

Mr. B. B. Chandra, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant-opposite party executed three mortgage-deeds in favour of the plaintiff-applicant on the 6th of July 1918 and received a sum of Rs. 198 from the plaintiff-applicant. The mortgages were usufructuary, but the defendant failed to have the mortgage-deeds registered or to put the plaintiff-applicant in possession. On these allegations the plaintiff brought a suit for the return of the money advanced to the defendant with interest thereon.

The Court of first instance decreed the plaintiff's claim but the lower Appellate Court dismissed it. Both the Courts held that the defendant had received the sum of Rs. 198 from the plaintiff, but the lower Appellate Court held that under the terms of the mortgage-deeds the defendant was not personally liable to pay the money advanced. Against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge this application has been made in revision.

It is quite clear that the learned Subordinate Judge has gone wrong in discussing the question whether the terms of the mortgage-deeds are such as to render the defendant personally liable for payment of the money advanced. The plaintiff's case was that the mortgages failed altogether, as the defendant had not got the deeds registered as he ought to have done and had not put the plaintiff in possession. The plaintiff claimed in effect that the defendant had broken his contract and that, therefore, he (the plaintiff) was entitled to a refund of the money which he had paid to the defendant. The learned Pleader for the applicant has relied on section 65 of the Indian Contract Act, but it seems to me that that section is in no way applicable to the present case as the plaintiff could by a suit have compelled the defendant to have the mortgage deeds registered and to give him possession of the property in accordance with the terms of the agreement. The case is, in my opinion, governed by section 73 of the Indian Contract Act. The defendant has broken his contract to give the plaintiff a valid mortgage and to place him in possession of the mortgaged property, and the plaintiff, who has suffered by such breach, is, therefore, entitled to receive from the defendant who has broken the contract, compensation for any loss or damage caused to him thereby which naturally arose in the usual course of things from such breach. He is at least entitled to recover from the defendant the money which he has paid to him in pursuance of the terms of the agreement. Though the illustrations to section 73 of the Indian Contract Act refer mainly to breach of contract with regard to movables, there is nothing in the wording of the section itself which would indicate that it is not applicable to contracts dealing with immovable property: Nagardas Saubhagyadas v. Ahmedkhan (1) and Ranchhod Bhawan v. Manmohandas Ramji (2).

The application is, therefore, allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the decree of the Court of first instance is restored. The applicant will get his costs in all Courts from the opposite party.

Injunction in respect of land, suit for—Pleadings—Boundaries of land in dispute to be clearly defined—Issues, definite—Court, duty of.

In cases where an injunction is sought to restrain the defendant from erecting buildings on land alleged to belong to the plaintiff, it is essential that the boundaries of the land should be given in order to assist the Court to find out what is actually in dispute and against what portion of the land the injunction is sought to be effected. A map ought to be attached to the plaint, and vague descriptions of the boundary ought not to be accepted [p. 891, col. 2]

In such cases it is desirable that issues should be so framed that the Court may understand the actual points arising for its determination, and it ought not to be left open to the parties to raise equivocal, ambiguous and evasive issues [p. 891, col 2]

JUDGMENT.—This suit is for a declaration that the defendant No. 1 had no transferable Kaimi right to the disputed land or any right to construct buildings thereon and that the defendant No. 4 had not acquired any right to construct buildings thereon by the purchase of the leasehold rights said to have been created by defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The plaintiffs also prayed for permanent and ad interim injunctions.

The plaintiffs are the proprietors of certain lands bearing Touzi Nos. 3994 and 3994A. Their case is that within that Mahal there is a Thika Garkaimi Jama of Rs. 92-11-5 recorded in the plaintiffs' sheristu in the name of late Hara Chandra Lahiri, that out of the said lands a certain quantity was acquired by the Government and that the disputed land is said to be 7 bighas described in Schedule Gas appertaining to this Jama. It is upon these allegations that the plaintiffs sought relief in this suit.

Several issues were raised, and it is noticeable that although it was suggested at one stage that these 7 bighas of land might have formed part of certain other lands belonging to the plaintiffs, yet there was no distinct issue raised with regard to that matter before the trial Court. The learned Subordinate Judge referred to issue No. 6 and said that it appeared to him to have been drawn up in an alternative form, "which had been characterized in several decisions of this Court to be erroneous and misleading," and he said that the proper issue was whether the land in dispute was included within the plaintiffs' alleged Jama in the name of Hara Chandra Lahiri, as to which the plaintiffs sought a declaration of the character referred to already, namely, that it was a Thika Garkaimi or temporary Jama. That was really the issue which was accepted and decided. The learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that it was for the plaintiffs to show that any portion of the disputed land was within this Jama and that they had failed to show that it was. He also went into the question of the character of the Jama, although having regard to his findings he felt that it was unnecessary to do so. He held that this Jama which stood in the name of Hara Chandra Lahiri originally stood in the name of Krishna Sundari Dasi. As to when it came into existence he was unable to ascertain. That it certainly did exist before 1848 was the conclusion he had arrived at; and he said that probably it came into existence somewhere in 1820 or 1833. He says that the river receded about a century ago and lands were formed. Then there was the usual scramble by the neighbouring landlords and the Government also stepped in. Litigation followed and settlements were made by the Government. The settlement took place in 1845 and the Touzis above mentioned were formed by which the plaintiffs became the Malik. In the Settlement Rubakari in connection with these Touzis reference is made to this Jama, which was found to be in the possession of Krishna Sundari Dasi. A Kabuliyat was taken from her in August 1846. That Kabuliyat does not moreover seem to have been the final document as sanction from the Board was expected at that time and, therefore, the terms of that Kabuliyat were not considered by the learned Subordinate Judge as of any importance. It appears that a little time thereafter Hara Chandra Lahiri acquired this Jama by virtue of a Kobala executed by this lady. He was recognised as the rightful purchaser of the Jama by the superior proprietors. He thereafter mortgaged it to certain people. It was then sold at the instance of the mortgagees and a lady of the name of Rasamoye Dasi purchased it. She was the Benamdar of a well-known Calcutta Zemindar named Moti Lal Seal. From the time it came into her possession it has descended to the successors, the Seals, generation after generation, and it was now in the hands of the 4th generation. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that during this time there was unmistakable recognition of the heritable, alienable and transmissible character of this Jama. He also found that the rent was a fixed rent, and regard being had also to much litigation arising out of land acquisition proceedings and rent suits, he came to the conclusion that the Jama was a Kaimi Jama.

In appeal the learned Judge has practically arrived at the same conclusions. He holds that the plaintiffs have not succeeded in proving that the land described in Schedule Ga or any portion of it is included within the Jama which was in the name of Hara Chandra Lahiri, and in addition to the facts found by the Subordinate Judge he also relies upon the fact that substantial structures were raised on this land which was surrounded by walls and that houses were erected without any opposition from the landlords. Upon these findings the conclusion that the lower Courts have arrived at must be upheld.

It has been argued before us, however, that another point arose in connection with this case which has not been considered, namely, that the 7 bighas in dispute or at any rate some portion of it may not belong to the Jama in the name of Hara Chandra Lahiri, but may appertain to the mal lands of the plaintiffs in the Touzi above mentioned. That case was never made before this. In these cases it is absolutely essential that the boundaries should be clearly given in order to help the Court to find out what is actually in dispute and against what portion the injunction is sought to be effected. A map ought to be attached to the plaint. Vague descriptions of the boundary, such as 'land in the possession of the plaintiff or land in the possession of the defendant," ought not be accepted. It is also very desirable the issues should so be framed that the Court may understand the actual points arising for its determination, and it ought not to be left open to the parties to raise equivocal, ambiguous and evasive issues which one frequently finds raised in trials of this character. It is the duty of the Court to settle the issues and render them clear. We are unable to change the character of the suit now and start an enquiry as to whether the plaintiffs would have been entitled if they had claimed any right to the disputed land as belonging to their own mal lands. We were asked to give them leave to withdraw the present suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit. We do not think we can accede to this request at this stage. If they have any claim that the land is land really belonging to them as mal land but does not appertain to this Jama, it may be that they will be able to pursue their remedies. With regard to that we do not desire to express our opinion having regard to the findings, which are clearly expressed and correctly decided.

This appeal is dismissed with costs.

Pre-emption—Sale—Mortgage, whether sale—Stringency of terms, effect of—Appeal, second—Finding that transaction is not sale, whether can be disturbed.

The onerous character of a mortgage does not necessarily lead to an inference that a sale was clothed in the form of a mortgage to defeat pre-emption.

The stringency of the terms of the mortgage coupled with other evidence adduced may justify a conclusion that the mortgage was used as a cloak, but if the Court competent to express an opinion on the evidence, in the light of the probability suggested by the stringency of the terms, expresses an opinion adverse to the pre-emptor, its finding cannot be disturbed in second appeal.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 23rd October 1918, setting aside that of the Subordinate Judge, Barabanki, dated the 31st March 1918.

The Hon'ble Mr. Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. B. Sen, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

Mr. S. N. Sinha, for Respondents Nos. 3 to 5.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The question for consideration is whether a transaction clothed in the form of a usufructuary mortgage for Rs. 2,500 and a deed of further charge for Rs. 1,900 re-payable after 15 years were really a transaction of sale or a transaction of mortgage.

The Court of first instance found that a sale was intended, relying both on the evidence adduced and the stringency of some of the terms contained in those deeds. The lower Appellate Court, however, took a different view. Its finding was that the evidence produced by the plaintiff to show that a sale was really intended could not be trusted and that the stringency of the terms was not enough to justify an inference that the transaction was really one of sale.

As pointed out in Badri Singh v. Ohandika

BIBI SAIRAH v. GOLAB KUAR.

Singh (1) and Majida Bibi v. Fazl Karim (2), the onerous character of a mortgage does not necessarily lead to an inference that a sale was clothed in the form of a mortgage to defeat pre emption. The stringency of the terms coupled with the other evidence adduced in the case may justify a conclusion that the mortgage was used as a cloak, but if the Court which is competent to express an opinion on the evidence in the light of the probability suggested by the stringency of the terms expresses an opinion which is adverse to the pre-emptor, its finding cannot be disturbed in second appeal.

The learned Counsel who appears for the plaintiff-appellant urges that the lower Appellate Court excluded the stringency of the terms completely from its consideration. But what the lower Appellate Court said was that the mere fact that the deeds contained stringent terms to which the mortgagor had agreed was not enough to prove that the transaction was not a mortgage but a sale. It referred to the evidence of Mazhar Ali, one of the marginal witnesses to the mortgage deed, who stated that the term of redemption was originally fixed at 25 years but was subsequently reduced to 15 years at the request of the mortgagor. The inference which the lower Appellate Court drew from that fact was that the transaction was really intended to be one of mortgage. There is no reason for interfering with the finding arrived at by the lower Appellate Court.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Where a suit is undervalued and as a consequence of the undervaluation is instituted in a Court which would not have had jurisdiction to entertain it had it been correctly valued, the time spent in prosecuting the suit in such Court cannot, under section 14 of the Limitation Act, be allowed in computing the period of limitation applicable to the suit. A suit under Order XXI, rule 63, of the Civil Procedure Code, in which a transferee from the judgment-debtor seeks to establish his title to the property transferred, is in effect a suit to set aside an order passed under rule 58 of the Order and, therefore, the onus lies upon the person relying upon the deed of transfer not merely to prove that it was properly executed and that consideration passed but that the document is really what it purports to be and is not merely a colourable transaction. Appeal from a decision of the Officiating District Judge, Muzafferpur, dated the 24th September 1917.

Messrs. Fukhruddin and P. Banerjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. Rai Guru Saran Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff Bibi Sairah against a decision of the Officiating District Judge of Muzafferpur, dated the 24th September 1917, in which, overruling the decision of the Subordinate Judge, he dismissed the plaintiff's suit for a declaration.

The plaintiff brought the present suit under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 63, of the Civil Procedure Code, claiming a declaration from the Court that she was the owner in possession of certain property specified in the plaint, and that it never belonged to the defendant 2nd party, and that the defendants 1st party had no right at all to attach and sell the property in execution of a decree which they had obtained against the defendant 2nd party.

Two questions, and two questions only, have been raised in this appeal, one relating to limitation and the other relating to the validity of the transfer of the property in suit made by the plaintiff's husband, who is the defendant 2nd party, at a time when the defendants 1st party had obtained a decree against her husband. In order to understand how the questions for consideration arose, it is necessary to state shortly what the facts are.

In February 1908 the defendants 1st party, whom it will be convenient to refer to as the decree holders, obtained a decree against the defendant 2nd party, who is the husband, as I have already stated, of the plaintiff, for a sum of, in round figures, Rs. 38,000. In the year 1909 execution proceedings under that decree were instituted by the decree-holders. These were opposed by the judgment debtor, the defendant 2nd party, who petitioned to set aside the decree and the execution was stayed pending the hearing of his petition, but, on the 28th September 1910, his objection was disallowed. It appears from the record that the decree was partly executed against the judgment debtor, the defendant 2nd party, and, sometime in the year 1912, further execution proceedings were taken out by the decree-holders and certain properties, which are the subject of the present appeal, were attached and advertised for sale. Previously to that, on the 24th November 1910, the judgment-debtor transferred to the plaintiff under a baimokasa deed the property in suit which, at that time, belonged to him and the consideration for the transfer was stated to be the release by the transferee of her husband's obligation to her to pay deferred dower to the extent of the value of the property, which was valued at Rs. 5,000. On the 19th April 1913 the plaintiff filed objections to the execution proceeding, under Order XXI, rule 58, of the Civil Procedure Code, claiming that the property which had been attached had been transferred to her and was in her possession and was not subject to attachment by the defendants 1st party in their suit against her husband. This objection was rejected by the Subordinate Judge, on the ground that the transfer was fabricated in order to defraud the creditors of the judgment-debtor. Thereupon, on the 10th June 1913, rather less than two months later, the plaintiff instituted the present suit in the Munsif's Court at Muzaffarpur.

In that suit she valued the property, for purposes of jurisdiction, at a sum of Rs. 1,500, and not at a sum of Rs. 5,000, which was the value put upon it in the baimokasa deed under which she claimed to have acquired the property. The Munsif at Muzaffarpur, at that date, had jurisdiction to try suits up to the value of Rs. 2,000 and, therefore, if the valuation of the suit was properly given in the plaint there can be no doubt that the suit was properly instituted in the Munsif's Court. But, shortly after the institution of the suit, it appears that the Munsif was transferred and there was no other Munsif at Muzaffarpur who had jurisdiction to try a suit of a value of over Rs. 1,000. Accordingly, the case was transferred from the Munsif's Court to that of the Subordinate Judge, by order of the District Judge, on the ground that the Munsif's successor had no jurisdiction to try suits of a value over Rs. 1,000. That order of the District Judge was made in compliance with the provisions of section 24 of the Civil Procedure Code.

After the case had been transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, a question arose between the plaintiff and the defendants 1st party as to the real value of the property. It appears from the order passed on that occasion, dated the 2nd July 1914, by the Subordinate Judge that the dispute between the parties was really relative to a question of Court-fees, the plaintiff contending that the value of the property was Rs. 1,500 and the defendants contending, apparently, that it was of the value stated in the baimokasa deed, viz., Rs, 5,000. The view that the Subordinate Judge took, so far as the Court fees stamp was concerned, was that, in any case, whether it was Rs. 1,500 or Rs. 5,000, the stamp was sufficient and he made this order:—

"In this case the plaint was stamped with a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 10 only in value. The case reported as Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (1) supports this view. I, therefore, hold that the plaint has been properly valued."

It appears to me, reading this order and referring to the case of Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (1), that the only question which the Subordinate Judge was concerning himself with was, whether the proper Court fee had been paid, and when he states, "I, therefore, hold that the plaint has been properly valued", I cannot help feeling that what he intended to say was that so far as the Court fee was concerned, it did not matter whether the valuation was Rs. 1,500 or Rs. 5,000. However that might be, it appears that upon the same day the plaintiff herself applied to amend the plaint by altering the value from Rs. 1,500, as originally stated, to Rs. 5,000 and the plaint was amended accordingly. That was on the 2nd July 1914. After the plaint had been amended, the Subordinate Judge, on the 8th July 1914, returned it to the plaintiff for refiling it in the proper Court, he being of opinion that a suit valued at Rs. 5,000 could not have been filed in the Court of the Munsif and, therefore, it ought to be refiled in the Court of the Subordinate Judge so as to grant jurisdiction. The reason given by the Subordinate Judge was that the Court in which the plaint was originally filed had no jurisdiction to try the case.

The defendant 2nd party, the husband of the plaintiff, as might be expected, put in no written statement to the suit, but the decree-holders contended, by their written statement, first of all, that the suit was barred by limitation and, secondly, that the transfer to the plaintiff by her husband of the property in suit was not a bona fide and valid transaction but merely colourable, and that, in any event, the baimokasa deed was executed by the husband in order to defeat and delay his creditors within the provisions of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act.

When the case came for trial before the Subordinate Judge, the issues framed were as follows:—

(1) Whether the deed of baimokasa is a bona fide and valid transaction? Whether it was executed in order to defeat and defraud creditors as stated by the defendants?

(2) Is the suit barred by limitation?

It will be observed that the first issue is really divided into two separate questions. The first part goes to the validity of the transaction. The second goes to the question whether or not it is voidable at the option of the creditors who have been defeated or delayed thereby, and the case appears to have been fought and tried and determined on those lines. The Subordinate Judge decided both the first and the second issues in favour of the plaintiff and granted her a decree.

The District Judge, on appeal, differed with him on both points. He came to the conclusion that the suit was barred by limitation, that the document of transfer relied upon by the plaintiff was not a bona fide document, and that the plaintiff was never really in possession of the property. He also came to the conclusion on the evidence that, in any event, the transfer was meant to keep the defendants and the other creditors at a safe distance and to defeat and delay them. From this decision the plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

She contends that the learned District Judge was wrong on both points which he decided against her. It will be convenient to deal with the question of limitation first. The period in which a suit under Order XXI, rule 63, of the Civil Procedure Code, may be instituted is one year from the time when the objection in execution is decided against the plaintiff, and if the suit was properly instituted in the first instance, that is to say, on the 10th June 1913, when the plaint was filed in the Court of the Munsif at Muzafferpur, then it was clearly within time. If, however, the suit was instituted before a Court which had no jurisdiction to try it, then the time of institution must be taken as the 8th July 1914, which is clearly more than a year after the date when the objection in execution under Order XXI, rule 58 of the Civil Procedure Code, was decided against the plaintiff. The question, therefore, is whether the learned District Judge was right in coming to the conclusion, as he did, that the suit was instituted in a Court which had no jurisdiction to try it. It is not disputed now that the value of the subject-matter of the suit was Rs. 5,000, and it is not disputed that the plaintiff cannot, by undervaluing the suit, proceed in a Court which has not jurisdiction to try such suit if valued at the proper amount, and if, in fact, it should turn out, as it has now been admitted, that the value was Rs. 5,000 and not Rs. 1,500, the plaintiff cannot, by valuing it at Rs. 1,500, be heard to say that the suit was properly instituted in the first instance. It is contended, however, that by reason of the transfer made by the District Judge when the Munsif before whom the suit was originally instituted was transferred, any defect there might be in the initial want of jurisdiction in the Court before which the suit was instituted was cured, and that, the case having once got before the Subordinate Judge, it was of no moment whether the value was Rs. 1,500 or Rs. 5,000 because the Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to try a suit of either value. It has been decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ledgard v Bull (2) that an order for the transfer of a suit from one Court to another under section 25 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be made unless the suit has been brought in a Court having jurisdiction. That was under section 25 of the old Code, which is now equivalent to section 24 of the present Code. In that case, it is true, the Court in which the suit was instituted had no jurisdiction whatever over the subject-matter, and we have been asked to distinguish that case from the present on the ground that, in the present instance, there is jurisdiction in the Munsif's Court over the subject-matter of the suit upto, at all events, the value of Rs. 1,500. I cannot accept this argument, because I can see no difference in principle between a case where a Court has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter and a case where a Court has no jurisdiction over subject-matter valued at over a certain amount. The subject-matter of the suit in this case is property worth Rs. 5,000. The Court of the Munsif had no jurisdiction whatever to try the case and it seems to me, once a limit is placed upon the pecuniary valuation of the property which may be the subject of a suit in a certain Court, that you cannot say that the Court has any jurisdiction in regard to property of a value over and above that limit. If that is so, it would appear to follow from the decision of their Lordships in the case of Ledgard v. Bull (2) that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to transfer the case under section 24 of the Civil Procedure Code so as to confer jurisdiction upon the Munsif's successor or substitute, in this case substitute, because his successor had not jurisdiction to try a case of over Rs. 1,000.

The next point which was mentioned but not really pressed was that the plaintiff should be allowed under section 14 of the Limitation Act to deduct the time which was occupied in prosecuting the suit instituted in the Munsif's Court from the period of limitation. The short answer to this is, that the District Judge has found, as a fact, that the plaintiff was not acting in good faith in valuing the property at Rs. 1,500 and in instituting her suit and prosecuting it in the Munsif's Court, and, in support of his finding, he relied upon section 2, clause 7, of the Limitation Act, which provides that nothing shall be deemed to be done in good faith which is not done with due care and caution. As he was satisfied that due care and caution had not been exercised on the part of the plaintiff in this case but, rather, that she deliberately valued her suit at Rs. 1,500 in order to bring it before the Munsif as the Subordinate Judge had already dismissed her objection under Order XXI, rule 58, he thought that there were no merits to enable him to come to the conclusion that she had been acting in good faith. He found as a fact that it was not a bona fide mistake and that section 14 of the Limitation Act had no application to the circumstances of the case. In these circumstances, I have come to the conclusion that the learned District Judge was right in holding that the suit was barred by limitation, and that is sufficient to dispose of this case.

The other question, however, was argued before us at some length, and I think it is desirable to state, shortly, the conclusions at which I have arrived on that question. It was contended, in the first instance, that the learned District Judge, in arriving at his conclusions of fact, had not taken into consideration certain features of the evidence which had been dealt with by the Subordinate Judge. The principal feature, and practically the only feature, which it is claimed the District Judge did not deal with specifically in his judgment was the fact, which was referred to in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, that the defendant 2nd party, the judgment-debtor in this case, had paid off a decree held by another party for Rs 15,000, and had also paid off a sum of Rs. 20,000 due under the decree of the defendants 1st party, the decree holders, and it was in evidence that he was still in possession of property which yielded an income of Rs. 6,000 and, therefore, it could not be argued that he had no means to re-pay the defendants 1st party. It is quite true that the District Judge does not appear to refer specifically to this portion of the evidence relied upon by the Judge of the trial Court, but it cannot be supposed that the reasons which actuated the Subordinate Judge were not present to the mind of the District Judge at the time he gave his judgment, nor is it, in my opinion, necessary that he should deal in detail with the whole of the reasons which induced the Subordinate Judge to arrive at the conclusions of fact at which he did. The learned District Judge goes through the main features of the case very carefully, weighs them, and, for reasons which cannot now be impugned, he comes to the conclusion that the document in question relied upon by the plaintiff was not a bona fide document and, further, that there was no evidence to satisfy him that the plaintiff ever was in possession of the property at all; in other words, that her husband remained in possession of the property and that the so-called deed of baimokasa had not been intended to be acted upon at all. He further came to the conclusion that the object of this transaction was to defeat and delay the creditors.

The second argument adduced on behalf of the appellant on this part of the case was, that the learned Judge had wrongly placed the onus upon the appellant of proving, not only the actual fact of transfer and consideration paid, but the further fact that the deed in question was really what it purported to be, that is to say, a bona fide transaction meant to pass the property. It was contended that, once the transaction had been proved and the fact that the transfer was for good consideration, the onus lay upon the persons impugning that deed to prove that it was not a bona fide transaction, and for this contention the case of Suba Bibi v. Balgobind Das (3) was relied upon. The facts of that case were certainly somewhat similar to the present and the onus there of proving that the document relied upon was not a bona fide valid transaction was placed upon the defendant in the suit. But, although in ordinary cases I think it may be accepted that when once a transfer is proved and the passing of consideration shown, the onus then lies upon the person impugning the document to prove that it is not a valid and bona fide transaction, still, in the present case, the suit is one brought under Order XXI, rule 63, of the Civil Procedure Code, which is in effect, as pointed out in the case of Jamahar Kumari Bibi v. Askaran Boid (4), a suit to set aside an order passed under Order XXI, rule 58, and, therefore, the onus lies upon the person relying upon the deed of transfer, not merely to prove that it was properly executed and that consideration passed, but that the document is really what it purports to be and is not merely a colourable transaction. This question was not specifically dealt with by the learned Judges who decided the case of Suba Bibi v. Balgobind Das (3) and the incidents attaching to a suit under Order XXI, rule 63, in so far as they affect the burden of proof, do not appear to have been considered in that judgment. But, in the case, I have just referred to, of Jamahar Kumari Bibi v. Askaran Boid (4), this very question was raised and discussed and determined. A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court, consisting of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., Woodroffe and Mookerjee, JJ., three distinguished Judges of that Court, having considered this question as to the onus of proof in a suit, such as the present suit, brought under Order XXI, rule 63, came to the conclusion that in a suit to set aside an order made adversely to the plaintiff on a claim to property preferred by her in execution proceedings, on the ground that the property belongs to her in her own right and not as a benamidar for the judgment-debtor, the onus is on her to show affirmatively that not only the ostensible but the real title also is in her. The burden cast on her is not discharged by merely pointing to the innocent appearance of the instruments under which she claims; she must show that they are as good as they look. The defendant is not to make out that they are colourable. That is a decision of three Judges of the Calcutta High Court in which this very question was discussed and determined, and I see no reason for differing from the conclusions therein arrived at. Accepting the ruling laid down there, as I do, it seems to me that the learned District Judge was perfectly right in holding, as he did, that the onus lay upon the plaintiff to prove not merely the execution of the document and the passing of consideration but also the further fact that the document was, to use the language of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, "as good as it looked."

The next point which was raised by the appellant was that in a suit of this nature it was not competent to the defendant to set up, as a weapon of defence, section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, and that, until they had taken proper proceedings in a Court of competent jurisdiction to set aside the transfer, they could not, in a suit of this nature, contend that the transfer was voidable and so defeat the plaintiff's claim, and for that proposition certain decisions of the Madras High Court were relied upon. It is not necessary to refer to them all, but the principal decision which was relied upon was that of Palaniandi Chetti v. Appavu Chettiar (5). The first part of the head-note which was relied upon by the appellant is this, "In a declaratory suit under Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, by a vendee from the judgment-debtor, the decree-holder cannot plead in defence that the sale was in fraud of creditors and could not prevail over his decree. If the sale was prior to the attachment, the decree-holder must first set aside the sale by a separate suit." But it must be pointed out that the judgment proceeds upon the assumption that the transaction in question was a real one and that it effected and was meant to effect a real transfer of the property from the transferor to the transferee, that is to say, that it was not merely a colourable transaction. In the present case, it has been found upon the issues raised that the transfer was not a bona fide transfer at all, that the plaintiff in the suit never had possession of the property and that it was not, therefore, a valid transaction and, therefore, the decision arrived at in the case just mentioned does not appear to me to have any application to the facts of the present case.

The result of the findings is, that the baimokusa deed in this case is not merely voidable at the option of the creditors, but it is in fact void and only colourable and was never meant to be acted upon, and the mere fact that the transaction was one which was carried out with intent to defeat or delay or defraud creditors does not in itself bring it within the operation of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, which contemplates a transfer binding between the parties but voidable only at the option of the persons specified in the section.

For these reasons I have come to the conclusion that this appeal must fail upon both points raised by the appellant and must be dismissed with costs.

FOSTER, J.—I agree.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 19—Acknowledgment—Abichalnama containing recitals of mutual liability, whether acknowledgment—Acknowledgment accompanied by refusal to pay, effect of.

Where an abichalnama between the parties stated that it had become necessary to make an adjustment of accounts and determine the dues and liabilities of each party after examining the account of their business and went on to say that if after examining the accounts and taking all other evidence the arbitrators, either unanimously or by a majority, should decide that any sums were due to or from either of the parties, the parties would be bound to accept the same as their respective dues and liabilities:

Held, that the abichalnama contained an acknowledgment that accounts remained unadjusted which the arbitrators were to adjust and could be relied upon as a document constituting an acknowledgment within the meaning of section 19 of the Limitation Act. [p. 900, col. 2; p. 901, col. 1.]

Under section 19 of the Limitation Act it is not necessary that the acknowledgment should be addressed to any particular person and it is a sufficient acknowledgment even if it is accompanied by a refusal to pay. [p. 900, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Dacca, dated the 15th February 1917, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge 2nd Court of that district, dated the 29th March 1913, and remanding the case to his Court to be heard as against defendants Nos 1, 3, 4 and 5

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for accounts.

The plaintiff and the defendant No. 1 carried on a partnership business from the year 1311. It was closed at the end of 1313, corresponding to April 1907.

The suit was brought on the 8th March 1912, that is more than three years after the dissolution of the partnership. Prima facie, the suit was barred by limitation. But the plaintiff relies upon a document called an abichalnama as containing an acknowledgment which saves the claim from being barred.

The learned District Judge was of opinion that there was an acknowledgment of liability contained in the document and accordingly held that the suit was not barred. The defendant No. 1 has appealed to this Court.

Now, this abichalnama states that the parties (the plaintiff and the defendant) carried on an ijmali business from 1311 up to 1313 B. S. and that it had been closed since then. Then it goes on to say: "At present it has become necessary to make an adjustment of accounts and determine the dues and liabilities of each party after examining the accounts of the said business. As it is thought that it would be very unnecessarily expensive to have the adjustment of accounts effected through Court, we have agreed to have our disputes decided through arbitration and in that view I, Radha Bullav Shaha, and I, Janardan Shaha, appoint you, Shib Chandra Das Podder and Iswar Chandra Poddar and Nitai Chand Poddar, as arbitrators to settle our disputes and determine our respective dues and liabilities after taking evidence and going through the papers.....

.....If you, after examining our said ijmali karbar and taking all other evidence, decide either unanimously or by a majority that any sums are due to or from either of us, we will accept the same to be our respective dues or liabilities. Neither of us shall take any objection to the decision arrived at by you unanimously or by a majority and if we do any, the same will be rejected by Court according to law. You shall be competent to pay, out of the four hundred rupees deposited with you by each of us, the amount that will be found by you to be due from either of us upon the adjustment of accounts. If upon making up accounts the arbitrators determine that the sum due from either of us exceeds rupees four hundred deposited by him, then the person to be found so liable should deposit the additional sum with the arbitrators either at the time of making up accounts or within a time to be fixed by the arbitrators. If the arbitrators cannot arrive at any decision about our dues and liabilities from the papers of the karbar, they will either unanimously or by a majority determine what is fairly due from either of us and pay the same to the other from the amount deposited by the debtor.

"The arbitrators will decide the matters referred to them and adjust the accounts within three months from the date of registration of this abichalnama.....

We think that this document contained an acknowledgment that accounts remained unadjusted which the arbitrators were to adjust. It further appears that each party distinctly agreed that he would have to pay such amount as might be found due from him on adjustment of accounts. There can be no doubt about this, as each party actually deposited a sum of Rs. 400 with the arbitrators, which was to be applied in payment of the debt which the arbitrators might find to be due from one party to the other.

In the case of Maniram Seth v. Seth Rupchand (1) the Judicial Committee observed as follows: "For the last 5 years the respondent had open and current accounts with the deceased.....There is, therefore, a clear admission that there were open and current accounts between the parties at the death of Motiram. The legal consequence would be that at that date either of them had a right as against the other to an account. It follows equally that whoever on the account should be shown to be the debtor to the other, was bound to pay his debt to the other, and it appears to their Lordships that the inevitable deduction from this admission is that the respondent acknowledged his liability to pay his debt to Motiram or his representative, if the balance should be ascertained to be against him .....We have, therefore, the bare question of whether an acknowledgment of liability, if the balance on investigation should turn out to be against the person making the acknowledgment, is sufficient.....Their Lordships can see no reason for drawing any distinction in this respect between the English and the Indian Law. The question is whether a given state of circumstances falls within the natural meaning of a word which is not a word of art, but an ordinary word of the English language, and this question is clear of any extraneous complications imposed by the Statute law of either England or India."

Their Lordships referred to a decision of Lord Justice Mellish in the case of River Steamer Co., In re, Mitchell's Claim (2), where that learned Judge laid it down that "an acknowledgment to take the case out of the Statute of Limitation, must be either one from which an absolute promise to pay can be inferred, or secondly, an unconditional promise to pay the specific debt, or thirdly, there must be a conditional promise to pay the debt and evidence that the condition has been performed," and observed:—

"An unconditional acknowledgment has always been held to imply a promise to pay because that is the natural inference, if nothing is said to the contrary. It is what every honest man would mean to do. There can be no reason for giving a different meaning to an acknowledgment that there is a right to have the accounts settled and no qualification of the natural inference that whoever is the creditor shall be paid when the condition is performed by the ascertainment of a balance in favour of the claimant..... .....The Indian Limitation Act, section 19, however, says nothing about a promise to pay and requires only a definite admission of liability, as to which there can be no reason for departing from the English principle that an unqualified admission and an admission qualified by a condition, which is fulfilled, stand upon precisely the same footing."

In the cases of Prance v. Sympson (3), and Banner v. Berridge (4), which were referred to in the judgment of their Lordships, similar acknowledgments were held to satisfy the English law on the subject. In the first case it was held that it is not necessary to have an acknowledgment that a debt is actually due, but it is sufficient that there should be an acknowledgment that the account is pending, and a promise to pay the balance if it should be found to be against the accounting party. In the second case it was held that an unqualified admission that there is a pending account between the parties which has to be examined, is an admission from which a promise may be inferred that when the account is settled the balance shall be paid and that such an admission saved limitation.

In the case of Sitayya v. Rangareddi (5), the decision in which was based upon the two English cases cited above, an acknowledgment of the plaintiff's right to have accounts taken and of the defendant's liability to pay any balance (if such there should be) against him was held to satisfy the requirements of section 19 of the Limitation Act.

It was pointed out in the case of Maniram Seth v. Seth Rupchand (1) that "the requirements of English law are, if any thing, more, and not less, stringent than those of Indian law."

On behalf of the respondents we have been referred to Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 19, page 66, where it is stated that a reference to arbitration does not amount to an acknowledgment of the debt. That is so; but on the very same page, it is stated that where there is an acknowledgment that accounts are still pending and have not yet been adjusted, it constitutes an acknowledgment of liability.

The learned Pleader for the opposite party also relied upon the cases of Jogeshwar Roy v. Rai Narain Mitra (6), Bollapragada Rama murthy v. Thammanna Gopayya (7) and Andiappa Chetty v. Devarajulu Naidoo (8). All these cases are distinguishable, as in none of them was there a clear and unqualified acknowledgment (such as there is in the present case) that there were unadjusted accounts and that one party would pay to the other any amount which might be found due from him on adjustment of accounts.

Each case must turn upon the particular terms of the document upon which reliance is placed as constituting the acknowledgment.

In the present case, there was a clear statement that the accounts had to be settled and further that each party would pay to the other any amount which might be found due from him on such adjustment of accounts and for this purpose each party deposited the sum of Rs. 400 with the arbitrators for payment to the other side.

It is to be observed that under section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act, it is not necessary that the acknowledgment should be addressed to any particular person and it is a sufficient acknowledgment even if it be accompanied by a refusal to pay. Here the document satisfied all the conditions of section 19 and we are of opinion that it

Adverse possession—Gift by joint owners—Petition to Collector for mutation of names, whether evidence of gift—Possession of donee, nature of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 91—Hindu Law—Will, construction of—Widow, estate taken by.

P., who died in 1867, executed a Will, clause 3 of which was in the following terms: "I have given my half share in Kariamangalam mitta to my wife, Nayar Alangarammal, alias Thayarammal, on account of her maintenance and other absolute use. She is at liberty to enjoy the same with powers of alienation by sale, etc" and by clause 4 he gave his property, in general terms, to the two infant sons of his eldest brother. The plaintiffs, the sons of the two foregoing, brought the present suit to establish their title to a moiety of the mitta or estate, and claimed, in the alternative, as persons entitled to succeed on the death of the testator's widow A, which occurred in 1912, to her property not disposed of during her lifetime or by her Will, that the moiety in question was undisposed of at her death and vested in them as her heirs.

The whole mitta originally belonged to the testator and his brother, and on the latter's death in 1879 his share became vested in his widow R. A. and R, the owners of the mitta, joined in a petition to the Collector in 1895 reciting that they had given away the mitta to D., the daughter of R, and prayed that the mitta be transferred accordingly, and this was done. The defendant, the daughter of D., contended that in consequence of this, the moiety passed to D. and through her to the defendant and that the estate having been in the possession of D, and herself after D's death for upwards of 12 years, the plaintiffs' suit was barred by the rule of adverse possession:

Held, (1) that clause 3 of the Will gave an absolute interest in the moiety to the testator's wife, and that the 4th clause operated upon the remaining property only, and that on the death of P. his moiety of the mitta vested in his widow A. absolutely; [p. 902, col. 1.]

(2) that during the lifetime of R the possession of D. was adverse as against both A. and R, that when on the death of R. in 1901 D. became entitled to a moiety of the property, the character of her possession of the other moiety as against A. was not changed, and as there had been an ouster of A. before the death of R which continued after her death, the possession of D. was adverse to A throughout, and that consequently the suit must fail; [p. 904, col. 1.]

(3) that having regard to section 91 of the Evidence Act, although the petition of 1895 to the Collector and the change of names in the register were not admissible to prove a gift, they could be referred to as explaining the nature and character of the possession thenceforth held by D., as leading to the inference that the receipt of the rents by D. was a receipt in the character of donee and owner of the land and, therefore, in her own right and not as a trustee or manager for her mother and aunt. [p. 903, col. 2.]

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the High Court of Madras, (Coutts Trotter and Srinivasa Aiyangar, JJ.), reported as 22 Ind. Cas. 111, in Civil Appeal No. 327 of 1913, against the decree of the District Court, Chingleput, in Original Suit No. 51 of 1912.

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT CAVE.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a decree of the High Court of Madras, dated the 19th November 1915, reversing a decree of the District Court of Chingleput, dated the 11th August 1913, and dismissing the suit.

The suit was brought to establish the title of the plaintiffs to a moiety of a mitta or estate situated about thirty miles from Madras and known as the mitta of Kariamangalam. The mitta at one time belonged to Narayanasami Pillai, an ancestor of the parties, and on his death it passed to his three sons as members of a joint family. In the year 1845 a partition took place, under the terms of which the eldest son relinquished all interest in the mitta, which thereupon became vested in the two younger sons, Gopala Krishna Pillai and Parthasarathi Pillai, in equal shares. No question arises as to the share of Gopala Krishna; but it is material to state that, on his death in the year 1879, his share became vested in his widow, Rajammal, and that he left issue one child only, a daughter named Duraisani.

Parthasarathi died in the year 1867, having made a Will upon which a question of construction arises. Clause 3 of the Will was in the following terms :—

"I have given my half share in Kariamangalam mitta to my wife, Nayar Alangarammal, alias, Thayarammal, on account of her maintenance and other absolute use. She is at liberty to enjoy the same with powers of alienation by sale, etc."

By clause 4 of the Will the testator gave his property (in general terms) to the two infant sons of his eldest brother, who are now represented by their sons, the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs contend that the effect of the Will was to vest the moiety in question in the testator's wife, Alangarammal, for her life only, and that on her death (which occurred in the year 1912) it passed under clause 4 to the plaintiffs ; but it was held both in the District Court and in the High Court that clause 3 gave an absolute interest in the moiety to the testator's wife, and that the fourth clause operated upon the remaining property only. Their Lordships agree with this construction of the Will; and they accordingly hold that, on the death of Parthasarathi, his moiety of the mitta vested in his widow, Alangarammal, absolutely.

But the plaintiffs have an alternative claim. It appears that they were the persons entitled to succeed on the death of Alangarammal to her property not disposed of during her lifetime or by her Will, and they contend that the moiety in question was in fact undisposed of at the death of Alangarammal, and accordingly vested in them as her heirs. The defendant, on the other hand, contends that, in consequence of certain events which happened during the lifetime of Alangarammal, the moiety in question passed to Duraisani, and through her to her daughter, the defendant, and accordingly that the plaintiffs have no right thereto. These events must now be stated.

On the 10th October 1895, Rajammal and Alangarammal, who were then the registered owners of the two moieties of the mitta, presented a petition to the Collector, whereby, after reciting that they had, on the 8th October 1895, given away the two villages constituting the mitta as stridhanam to Duraisani, alias Alamelu, they prayed that orders might be passed for transferring the villages into her name. The petition concluded: "The said Alamelu-ammal shall hold and enjoy them with power to alienate them by way of gift, mortgage, sale, etc." Duraisani on the same date also presented a petition to the Collector reciting the gift of the villages to her on the 8th October 1895, and requesting that they should be transferred into her name. The Collector accordingly on the 8th May 1896 registered the mitta in the name of Duraisani.

It was not contended before the Board that the above transactions effected a valid gift of the property to Duraisani ; for such a gift must, under section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, be made by registered deed. Nor, having regard to section 91 of the Evidence Act, can the recitals in the petitions be used as evidence of a gift having been made. But the defendant's case is that Duraisani, although she may have acquired no legal title under the transactions referred to, in fact took possession of the property when it was transferred into her name and retained such possession until her death in December 1911, after which date it passed to the defendant as her successor, and accordingly that the plaintiffs' claim is barred by upwards of twelve years' adverse possession. The High Court upheld this contention ; and their Lordships, after considering the evidence, have arrived at the same conclusion.

There was a considerable body of evidence showing that Duraisani was in possession or receipt of the rents and profits of the mitta during the period above referred to. At or about the date of the attempted gift, Duraisani, who until then had lived with her husband in Madras, came to live with her mother and her aunt, Alangarammal, in the neighbourhood of the mitta and thenceforward spent the greater part of the year with them. From the same date all pattas were granted and muchilikas taken in the name of Duraisani alone ; and the property was managed by agents appointed by her, who accounted to her for the rents. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that assuming Duraisani to have been in actual possession of the land, she held such possession, not in her own right, but as trustee or manager only for her mother and aunt, and accordingly that her possession was not such adverse possession as to give a title under the Limitation Act; and in support of this contention the plaintiffs relied upon the evidence of a former manigar of the estate, who stated that during the life of Rajammal (who died in 1901) he "used to pay collections to her." But the witness in question prefaced his evidence above referred to by the statement that Duraisani "had confidence in Rajammal," and he stated emphatically that Duraisani was zamindarini from 1896. Having regard to these statements and to the remainder of the evidence in the case, the proper inference appears to be that, if any rents were in fact paid to Rajammal after 1896, they were so paid by the direction of her daughter Duraisani (who lived with her) and in order that they might be applied to the joint household expenses.

The plaintiffs also relied upon the Will of Rajammal dated the 2nd April 1901. By this Will the testatrix referred expressly to the petition of the 10th October 1895 and the subsequent transfer of the two villages into the name of Duraisani, and added: "and the above two villages are being enjoyed by the said Duraisani Ammal." The Will then proceeded as follows:—

"My daughter, the said Alameluammal alias Duraisani Ammal, shall take the above two villages and shall either amicably or through Court recover and take all the following arrears, jewels, etc., due to me, viz, the Zamin Sircar arrears due to me in the said villages up to part Fasli 1305 upon account from the tenants of the said villages, etc."

It was held by the District Judge that these words amounted to a devise of the two villages to Duraisani, and accordingly that they afforded evidence that in the view of the testatrix no beneficial gift had been previously made to her, but the High Court held that there was in fact no devise of the villages. In the absence of the original text of the Will, which was no doubt seen by the Judges in India, their Lordships are unable to say which construction is correct. But even if the devise included the testatrix's interest in the two villages, it would appear to be reasonably clear that the gift was by way of confirmation only and affords no evidence that Duraisani was a trustee of the property. In any case the recitals contained in the Will are strong evidence of the possession of the property by Duraisani.

The plaintiffs also relied upon a draft Will which was prepared for Alangarammal just before her death in 1912, but which has been held by the Courts in India not to have been adopted by her as her Will. This draft Will contained recitals similar to those contained in the Will of Rajammal, and these recitals were followed by a gift of the villages to the defendant, who had then succeeded to the estate of Duraisani. It may be doubted whether any valid argument can be founded upon a draft Will not signed or adopted by the person for whom it was prepared, but in any case the observations which have been made concerning the Will of Rajammal apply to this draft Will also.

It should be added that, although the petition of 1895 and the change of names made in the register in consequence of those petitions are not admissible to prove a gift, they may nevertheless be referred to as explaining the nature and character of the possession thenceforth held by Duraisani. In other words, although the petitions and order do not amount to a gift of the land, they lead to the inference that the subsequent receipt of the rents by Duraisani was a receipt in the character of donee and owner of the land, and, therefore, in her own right and not as trustee or manager for her mother and aunt.

Lastly, the plaintiffs put forward the contention that on the death of Rajammal in 901 Duraisani became entitled either under her Will or by succession to her moiety of the mitta, and accordingly that as from that date possession of the villages must be deemed to have been held by her as part owner and not adversely. This contention was founded upon the English rule of law, which was abrogated by the Statute 3 and 4 William IV, C. 27, section 12, that the possession of one of several co-parceners' joint tenants or tenants in common is the possession of the others so as to prevent the statutes of limitation from affecting them. Whether this rule is applicable to sharers in an unpartitioned agricultural village in India not holding their shares as members of a joint family, it is unnecessary for the purposes of the present case to decide: for upon the facts of the case the rule has no application. The limits of the rule were defined in Culley v. Doe d Taylerson (1) as follows:—

"Generally speaking, one tenant-in-common cannot maintain an ejectment against another tenant-in-common, because the possession of one tenant-in-common is the possession of the other, and to enable the party complaining to maintain an ejectment, there must be an ouster of the party complaining. But, where the claimant, tenant-in-common, has not been in the participation of the rents and profits for a considerable length of time, and other circumstances concur, the Judge will direct the Jury to take into consideration whether they will presume that there has been an ouster: . . . . and, if the jury find an ouster, then the right of the lessor of the plaintiff to an undivided share will be decided exactly in the same way as if he had brought his ejectment for entirety."

In the present case, it is plain that during the life of Rajammal the possession of Duraisani was adverse as against both co-owners; and this being so, there is no reason for holding that when on the death of Rajammal she became legally entitled to a moiety of the property, the character of her possession of the other moiety as against Alangarammal was changed. There having been an ouster of Alangarammal before the death of Rajammal, this ouster continued after her death, and the possession of Duraisani was adverse to Alangarammal throughout. This contention, therefore, also fails.

For the above reasons and upon a review of the whole of the evidence their Lordships have arrived at the conclusion that the decision of the High Court is right, and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Appeal dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1367 OF 1917.

June 27, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Walmsley and Justice Sir Syed Shamsul Huda, Kt.

SITANATH SHAH BANIK—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—APPELLANT

MADAN MOHAN DAS—DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 6—Mortgage, suit on—Preliminary decree, declaring that if sale-proceeds prove insufficient mortgagor shall be liable for balance, nature of—Final decree, whether necessary.

A preliminary decree in a mortgage suit, which provides for sale of the mortgaged property and directs that if the whole amount of the debt is not realised by the sale, the defendant shall be liable for the rest of the claim if legally realisable, is not a composite decree which would enable the holder thereof to proceed against the other properties of the judgment-debtor without a fresh decree obtained under rule 6 of Order XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code and, therefore, the decree-holder is entitled to apply for a personal decree for the amount of the balance. [p. 905, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Sylhet, dated the 15th July 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Court (with special powers) of that place, dated the 21st February 1916.

Babus Broja Lal Chuckerbutty and Probodh Chandra Rai, for the Appellant.

Babu Gopal Chandra Dass, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

HUDA, J.—The facts are shortly these: The plaintiff decree-holder instituted a suit to enforce a mortgage-bond. A decree was passed for the sale of the mortgaged property and there was a further direction that if the whole amount was not realised by the sale of the mortgaged property for the rest of the claim, if legally realisable, the defendant No. 1 would be liable.

It appears that after this decree was obtained and before the mortgaged properties could be sold, a third party brought a suit for a declaration that the mortgaged property could not be sold in execution of the decree and succeeded in getting such a declaration in the presence of the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor. Thereupon the decree-holder applied to proceed against the other properties of the judgment-debtor, but the Court asked him to make an application under Order XXXIV, rule 6. He made such an application, but he was absent when it was taken up for disposal and it was rejected. The decree-holder afterwards made the present application under Order XXXIV, rule 6, and this application has given rise to this appeal, the judgment debtor being the appellant before us.

The points raised are, first, that the preliminary decree to which I have already referred was a composite decree which enabled the decree-holder to proceed against the other properties of the judgment-debtor without a fresh decree obtained under Order XXXIV, rule 6, and that, therefore, he is not entitled to a fresh decree, secondly, it is argued that the previous application for a decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, being rejected, the decree-holder cannot make a second application for such a decree.

As regards the second point, it seems to me that this not being a point which is raised in the grounds of appeal we ought not to allow the learned Vakil for the appellant to raise it, and there is another reason why he should not be allowed to raise the point and that is this; several points, and this was one of them, were raised in the lower Appellate Court but were abandoned at the hearing of the appeal. The only question, therefore, which I need consider is the question whether the decree-holder is entitled to a fresh decree. I think he is so entitled. In the first place, the preliminary decree was not a composite decree allowing the decree holder to proceed against the other properties of the judgment debtor. It says that he may proceed if he were legally entitled to do so, thus leaving it for future decision whether the decree-holder was legally entitled to obtain such a decree. It seems to me that although the language of the decree may be somewhat unfortunate, it was intended only to give leave to the decree-holder to apply for a personal decree for the amount of the balance. It has also been pointed out to us by the learned Vakil for the respondent that in the final decree that was passed there was no provision for any personal decree.

I, therefore, think that the decree passed by the Court below is correct and this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

FULL BENCH.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1799 OF 1917.

Present:—Sir Abdur Rahim, KT., Officiating Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar.

BEEJU BEE alias ZULAIKA BEE AMMAL (DEAD) AND OTHERS—DEFENDANT No. 2 AND LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF THE DECEASED 2ND DEFENDANT—APPELLANTS

Syed MOORTHUJA SAHIB AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 and 3 TO 3—RESPONDENTS.

Muhammadan Law—Dower—Widow, lien of, for unpaid dower, nature of—Transferee of lien, position and rights of

A Muhammadan widow, who is lawfully and without force or fraud in possession of her husband's property, is entitled to retain possession of such property as against his other heirs until her dower is satisfied, even though such possession was not obtained with the consent, express or implied, of, or under an agreement with her husband or his other heirs, and such property would not be divided among the heirs until the dower debt is satisfied. [p. 917, col. 1.]

A vendee from a Muhammadan widow in possession of her husband's property for payment of her dower is entitled to retain possession of the property sold to him as against the heirs till the unpaid dower-debt is satisfied, but the sale itself is invalid and not binding on the heirs. [p. 918, col. 2.]

(Authorities reviewed.)

Per Abdur Rahim, Offg. C. J.—A Muhammadan widow can transfer a dower-debt as also her right to remain in possession as a means of realising that debt. It may be that she does not acquire all the rights of a mortgagee properly so called by virtue of this lien for instance, she may not be entitled to sue for the sale of the property to realise the debt, or to claim a preference as against an auction-purchaser in execution of a decree passed on a mortgage executed by her husband, but to the limited extent that this right is recognised as security for payment of the dower-debt, there is no reason why it cannot be passed to a transferee of the dower-debt or transmitted to her heirs. [p. 91[2], col. 1.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—The right to retain possession and to pay herself out of the proceeds which a Muhammadan widow acquires to realise her dower-debt is not of the same kind as the lien considered in English cases. It is more in the nature of a charge on the property, because the right to pay herself out of the income is incidental to the possession taken by a widow. [p. 920, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, North Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 156 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Vellore, in Original Suit No 502 of 1914.

FACTS.—A Muhammadan widow to whom dower was due was found to be in possession of her husband's property. At the time of the husband's death, the other heirs were all minors (children). She alienated the property in 1906, five years after her husband's death. The question was, whether she had a lien for unpaid dower and whether an alienee could claim the benefit of such lien.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 18th July 1918, the Court (Phillips and Kumaraswami Sastri, JJ.) delivered the following JUDGMENT.—Before disposing of this appeal, it is necessary to have a finding as to whether Mahar was due to 1st defendant on the date of her husband's death and if so, what was its amount. Findings will be returned in six weeks. Time for filing objections is seven days.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot submitted the following FINDING.—Finding on the issue framed by the High Court and sent down for finding.

2. The issue is Whether Mahar was due to 1st defendant on the date of her husband's death and, if so, what was its amount.

3. When the 2nd defendant's Vakil proposed to adduce evidence on the issue newly framed by the High Court and sent down for finding, the Vakil for the plaintiff objected to it on the ground that the remand order does not contemplate the taking of fresh evidence and authorise this Court to do so and unless, as provided by Order XLI, rule 25, there is an express direction in the order of remand to admit additional evidence, this Court has no jurisdiction to receive it.

4. It is admitted on both sides that there is no evidence on the record on this issue, which is one of fact, for this Court to merely hear comments on it and record a finding and, therefore, though there is in the order of remand an omission to direct this Court to take down further or fresh evidence, this Court may do so. That even in the absence of such direction, the lower Appellate Court, i. e., the Court to which the new issue is sent down for finding, may receive or record additional or fresh evidence appears clearly from the notes of Mr. Ameer Ali to Order XLI, rule 25, where he has collected and quoted all the authorities on this point. Hence I decided to record the evidence the 2nd defendant proposed to adduce.

5. He examined three witnesses and filed Exhibit III, the marriage register of the plaintiff's father Amin Sahib with plaintiff's mother Amina Bi, who is the 1st defendant. Though she is described in the suit sale-deed as Banu Bi, her proper name, i. e., the name given to her by her parents, is Amina Bi. Amina is only the feminine form of Amin, which is the name of her husband. It was elicited in the evidence of the 1st witness Mahomed Sheriff that it is customary or usual to give a new name to the wife in the family of her husband, if the husband's name also happens to be the same as her name. Defendants' 3rd witness Mahomed Khan, who is the husband of the vendee the 2nd defendant, swears that he negotiated the sale transaction with the pensioned Subadar Mahomed Yusuff (whose son has married the daughter of the 1st defendant the vendor and who also acted as the vendor's agent in the matter of the sale) and was informed by him (the said Subadar) that her name Amina was changed into Banu by her husband after her marriage. In Exhibit III she is described as Amina Bi and daughter of Syed Cassim. This document, which is the original, is produced by the defendants' 1st witness Mahomed Sheriff, who is the present Government Khajee. He has been Khajee for the last 3 years. He succeeded in this office one Abdul Hafiz, who held that office for 18 or 20 years and died. This Abdul Hafiz is the son and successor as Khajee of his father Abdul Wahab. It seems to be the practice sanctioned by Government of these Khajees to appoint their own Naibs or deputies, who generally attend the Muhammadan marriages and register them and produce them before the Khajee, who either signs or affixes his seal on them and places them in his records. The predecessor-in-office of Abdul Wahab as Khajee was Mahomed Mohidin and the seal on Exhibit III is his seal. Exhibit III is in the handwriting of Abdul Wahab, who was the Naib or deputy of Mahomed Sharif. His handwriting is proved by defendants' 1st witness who has been in his youth a pupil of Abdul Wahab. This witness swears that he obtained Exhibit III from the custody of the widow of Abbul Hafiz, his immediate predecessor-in-office. Owing to disputes between the two widows of Abdul Hafiz he has not obtained possession of the entire records of his office but as occasion arises for production of any document he takes it from her. This document is dated 28th Shaban 1290 Hijiri corresponding to 7th October 1873. It is, therefore, an ancient document and it comes from proper custody and presumably genuine. The Mahar promised to the wife Amina by the husband Amin as stated in Exhibit III is 39 tolas of pure gold equal in value to Rs 570 in those days, as a sovereign was then selling at Rs. 10. Its present value is a little over Rs. 700 (sic) as the market price of a tola of pure gold is Rs. 32 as it is well known to every one. The statement in Exhibit III is also partially confirmed by the defendants' 2nd witness Ali Khan.

6. Mahar is either prompt or deferred. In exceptional cases it is prompt and it is generally deferred. In this case also it must be deferred, as the 1st defendant herself admits in the sale-deed, Exhibit I, that it was due. The plaintiff does not even now disclose or say that it was prompt and paid or that it has been satisfied by his father before his death or by his heirs after his death.

7. My finding, therefore, is that dower or Mahar was due to the 1st defendant on the date of her husband's death and it was 39 tolas of pure gold.

8. I may note here that after the 2nd defendant closed his evidence, the plaintiff moved for time to summon his witnesses, and it was refused as the finding is due on the 28th instant.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing on the 22nd April 1919, after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial and having stood over for consideration till the 1st May 1919, the Court (Phillips and Kumaraswami Sastri, JJ.) made the following ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

This second appeal raises two important questions of Muhammadan Law as to which there is a conflict of decisions.

One Syed Amin Sahib died about 19 years ago leaving a widow, two sons (one of whom died before suit) and four daughters. The plaintiff, who is the surviving son of the deceased, was a minor when his father died and he filed this suit about 14 years after his father's death for partition. Meantime the widow, who was in possession of the properties, sold one item of immoveable property left by her husband to the 2nd defendant by a sale-deed, Exhibit I, dated the 10th April 1906 and the vendee has been in possession ever since. The sale deed recites that the property was in the possession of the vendor and was sold for the dower-debt due to her from her husband according to Muhammadan Law, for discharging other debts and for family expenses.

There is no dispute as to the right of the plaintiff to the share claimed. The 2nd defendant claimed exclusive right to the property conveyed by the widow on the ground that the sale was binding on the plaintiff and the other heirs, but on second appeal this position was given up. It is argued on his behalf that on partition (which in this case has to be by sale under the Partition Act owing to the fractional share plaintiff is entitled to) the 2nd defendant as purchaser will not only be entitled to the share of his vendor or widow but also to the dower due to her. It is contended for the plaintiff that the dower has become barred, that the widow had no lien on the estate for her dower as she did not take possession under any agreement with the heirs, that she was to be in possession as security for or in lieu of her dower, and that in any event her right as widow in possession could not be assigned or pass to the purchaser.

We accept the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the sum of Rs. 700 and odd was due to the 1st defendant at the date of her husband's death and still remains unpaid. There is no evidence, nor was it the 1st defendant's case, that on her husband's death she was put in possession of the property (sold by her) under any agreement between herself and other heirs as to her dower. All that appears is that she was entitled to be paid her dower, that she was in possession from the date of her husband's death till she sold the house and that the sale-deed purports to be, inter alia, for the purpose of her paying herself the dower.

It has been held that a widow, who lawfully and with the consent, express or implied, of the other heirs of her husband obtains possession of the whole or any part of his estate in satisfaction of or as security for her dower, is entitled to retain such possession till her dower is paid. It is unnecessary to refer to the earlier authorities after the decision of the Privy Council in Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (1).

When, however, there is no such agreement, there has been a conflict of authorities. In Amani Begam v. Muhammad Karimullah (2) Burkitt, J., after referring to the decision of the Privy Council in Bebee Bachun v. Hamid Hossein (3), held that a Mohammadan widow, to whom dower is due and who is in lawful possession of her husband's property, is entitled against the co-heirs of the husband to retain possession of the property until the dower debt has been paid, it being immaterial whether this possession was obtained originally with or without the consent of the co-heirs. A similar view was taken by Mookerjee and Teunon, JJ., in Sabjan Bewa v. Ansar ud-din (4), where the learned Judges after a careful review of the authorities observed: "It cannot be disputed that under the Muhammadan Law when a widow is in possession of the undistributed property of her deceased husband, such possession having been obtained lawfully and without force or fraud, and her dower or any part of it is due and unpaid, she is entitled as against the other heirs of her husband to retain such possession until her dower-debt is paid; but she must account to them for the profit received."—They dissent from the decisions in Tasliman v. Kasiman (5) and Amanat un nissa v. Bashir unnissa (6), which lay down that an agreement with the widow or the heirs was necessary. A similar view was taken in Mohammad Sharafat v. Wahida Sultan Begum (7).

A contrary view was taken in Amanat-un-nissa v. Bashir-un nissa (6) and Muhammad Karimullah Khan v. Amani Begam (8), where it was held that a widow has no lien if she was not put in possession under an arrangement that she was to be in possession till her dower was paid. The decision in Muhammad Karimullah Khan v. Amani Begam (8) was an appeal from the judgment of Burkitt, J., in Amani Begam v. Muhammad Karimullah (2) already referred to. In Amanat un-nissa v. Bashir un-nissa (6) the learned Judges (Edge, C. J., and Banerji, J.) observe: "So far as we are aware, neither a Mohammadan widow nor any other creditor can give themselves a lien by taking possession, without the consent or authority of the persons entitled: of property to the possession of which those other persons are entitled. If a Muhammadan widow entitled to dower has not obtained lawfully, that is, by contract with her husband, by his putting her into possession, or by her being allowed, with the consent of the heirs, on his death to take possession in lieu of dower, and thus to obtain a lien for her dower, she cannot obtain that lien by taking possession, adversely to the other heirs, of property to the possession of which they, and she in respect of her share in the inheritance, are entitled" The above view, which puts a very limited construction on the words "property of which she has lawfully and without force or fraud obtained possession" in the judgment of the Privy Council in Bebee Bachun v. Hamid Hossein (3), has been criticised at some length by Sir Roland Wilson in his Digest of Anglo-Muhammadan Law at pages 233 to 235. In Ali Baksh v. Alah Dad Khan (9) the learned Judges were not in favour of the limited interpretation of the word 'lawfully.' Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (1), while dealing with the nature of the widow's right to dower, observe : "Her right, however, is no greater than that of any other unsecured creditor, except that if she lawfully with the express or implied consent of her husband or his other heirs obtains possession of the whole or part of his estate to satisfy her claim with the rents and issues accruing therefrom, she is entitled to retain such possession until it is satisfied. This is called the widow's lien for dower and this is the only creditor's lien of the Muhammadan Law which has received recognition in British Indian Courts and at this Board." The case proceeded on the finding that there was an agreement whereby the widow was allowed to be in possession by the other heirs to satisfy her claim, and their Lordships were not dealing with a case where she was in possession without any express consent or arrangement. None of the decisions of the Indian Courts as to the nature and extent of the widow's right in respect of dower was referred, and it is doubtful if their Lordships intended in the above passage to lay down that there was no lien unless the widow's possession was in pursuance of an arrangement with the husband or, on his death, of the other heirs.

The next question is as to the right of an alienee of the property from the widow to claim payment of dower due to her in cases when a widow in possession of her husband's property sells or mortgages it.

In Muzaffar Ali Khan v. Farbati (10) it was held, following Hadi Ali v. Akbar Ali (11) and Ali Muhammad Khan v. Azizullah Khan (12), that a Mohammadan widow in possession of immoveable property of her deceased husband in lieu of her dower has no transferable interest in the property, her interest being nothing more than an interest in property restricted in its enjoyment to the owner personally, the transfer of which is prohibited by section 6, clause (d) of the Transfer of Property Act. In Ali Bakhsh v. Alah Dad Khan (9) the right was, however, held to be heritable, entitling her heirs to remain in possession till the dower was paid. Referring to Ali Muhammad Khan v. Azizullah Khan (12) the learned judges accepted the ruling as correct when the property is transferred and not merely the right to dower. In Majidmian v. Bibi Saheb Jan (13) it was held that the widow entitled to dower and in possession with the consent of the heirs had a heritable right. If the right is not purely personal and can pass to her heirs, there seems to be no reason why an alienee of the property should not, on the sale being set aside at the instance of one of the heirs as being beyond her competence, stand in the widow's shoes at least to the extent of her claim for dower.

We have not been referred to any decision of the Madras High Court having any bearing on the questions above referred to. As the points raised are of considerable importance, we refer the following questions to a Full Bench :—

1. Is a Mohammadan widow who lawfully enters into or continues to be in possession of her husband's property after his death, but without any agreement with the other heirs as to her dower, entitled to be paid her dower before the property of which she is in possession is divided between her husband's heirs?

2. Has a vendee from her of such property the same right as the widow in respect of the dower due to her in cases where the widow has alienated the properties and the alienation is impeached by the other heirs?

This second appeal came on for hearing, in pursuance of the Order of Reference to a Full Bench on the 27th, 28th August and the 1st September 1919.

Mr. T. R Venkatrama Sastri (with him Mr. *M. T. [ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Is she just like any other creditor ?]

With this exception that she is entitled to take possession and retain it in respect of the property. Janee Khanum v. Amatool Fatima (17) which is upheld in Woomatool Fatima Begam v. Meerunnissa Khanum (18). See also Ahmed Hossein v. Khodeja (19), Bibee Tajim v. Syud Wahed Ali (20).

The only question is whether the entry is 'lawful.' The word has been held to import nothing more than absence of fraud or force, which is the present case. In any case the heirs ought to prove their case. See also Umatul Mehdi v. Kulsum (21), Sabjan Bewa v. Ansar ud din (4), Mohammad Sharafat v. Wahida Sultan Begum (7), Ramzan Ali Khan v. Asghari Begam (22). See also Ali Bakhsh v. Alah Dad Khan (9), Muhammad Karimullah Khan v. Amani Begam (8) and Amanat un-nissa v. Bashir un-nissa (6) (per contra), Bibi Tasliman v. Kasiman (5) (per contra). The widow is not bound to show that her husband or his other heirs consented to her taking possession. But see Ameer Ammal v. Sankaranarayanan Chetty (23), Bazayet Hossein v. Dooli Chund (24), Yasin Khan v. Muhammad Yar Khan (25).

On the second question referred, I submit that the lien has been construed to be in the nature of a security and as the dower-debt is undisputedly heritable and transferable, the security also is. Ali Bakhsh v. Allahdad Khan (9). It may be that she is incompetent to make a permanent and binding alienation. Kummur-ool-nissa Begum v. Mahomed Hussun (26). See also Nawab Mahomed Ameenooddeen Khan v. Mozuffer Hossein Khan (27). The so called 'lien' is a possessory right and possessory rights are transferable. Sundar v. Parbati (28), followed in Narayana Row v. Dharmachar (29), Azizullah Khan v. Ahmad Ali Khan (30). See also Majidmian v. Bibi Saheb Jan (13). But Ali Muhammad Khan v. Azizullah Khan (12) takes a different view. Azizullah Khan v. Ahmud Ali Khan (30) says that the widow's lien is heritable.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The Muhammadan Law of transfer is very limited.]

But see Ali Bakhsh v. Alah Dad Khan (9). The right is not a mere personal right, it being of the nature of a security. See also Basir Ali v. Nazir Ali (31), Jamna Das v. Ramautar Pande (32). The observations in Hadi Ali v. Akbar Ali (11) and Muzaffar Ali Khan v. Parbati (10) are purely obiter.

The strict rule of Muhammadan Law being that there can be no administration of the estate of a deceased Muhammadan until all his debts are paid, the right of the heirs to possession of their shares does not arise until the debts are all paid off. Hence it would follow that their consent to the widow's entering into possession of their share also in lieu of dower due is of no legal value, inasmuch as their shares are not in existence and so is unnecessary.

Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar (with him Mr. Mir Zynuddin), for the Respondent :— The Muhammadan Law is clear that either a contract with the husband or the consent of the heirs is necessary before a widow can get a lien for her dower. The consent may, however, be express or implied. Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (1). On the death of a Muhammadan, the estate vests in all his heirs at once in the proportion of their respective shares, subject to the payment of debts. Though the actual division may not be made, the vesting is not delayed. Hence consent is necessary before a lien can attach. See also Mohammad Husain

v. Bashiran (33); Macnaghten, page 356.

In the present case the heirs are the mother and children. The latter were minors at the time of their father's death. Hence their consent, either express or implied, was impossible. Hence no lien can attach.

The alienee cannot claim any right. The husband died in 1901. The alienation was in 1903, i.e, more than three years after. So the dower-debt was barred. Therefore, the alienee cannot claim anything on account of the dower. Construed too strictly, the lien, if any there was, has never been held to be anything more than heritable. It is not a 'lien' of the kind familiar to English law. It is not transferable. It does not rank on a par with a mortgage. Ameer Ammal v. Sankaranarayanan Chetty (23), following Yasin Khan v. Muhammad Yar Khan (25). See also Barayet Hossein v. Dooli Chund (24). Further the alienation cannot extend even to the widow's share, according to the strict rule contended for, for the alienation would be premature.

Moreover, in order that a lien should attach there should be possession to the exclusion of the other heirs. The mother and children are living together and there is no exclusive possession.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The question of consent was not before the Privy Council in Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (1), as it was assumed that there was no consent at all.]

It was. See also Arumugham Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (34), Vinjanampati Peta Venkanna v. Vadlamannati Sreenivasa Deekshatulu (35), Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (36).

OPINION

ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The first question asked by this reference is whether a Muhammadan widow, who is lawfully in possession of her husband's property after his death but not by virtue of any agreement with his other heirs, is entitled to retain such possession until the dower due to her has been paid or satisfied before the property in her possession is divided among the heirs.

In the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts there have been a long series of decisions, some of them conflicting with the others, on the subject of a Mohammadan widow's lien for dower, but in this Court the question is practically bare of authority. There are also four decisions of the Privy Council in this connection, the latest being in the case of Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (1). Our main task is to ascertain whether in the course of their judgment in the last case, the Judicial Committee wanted to confirm the view of the law expounded by the Chief Justice, Sir John Edge, of the Allahabad High Court in Amanat-un-nissa v. Bashir-un-nissa (6), restricting the lien of the widow to cases where she had entered upon possession in order to satisfy her dower-debt under an agreement with her husband or her husband's other heirs, or the view of the law expounded in Amani Begam v. Muhammad Karimullah (2), Ramzan Ali Khan v. Asghari Begum (22) and Subjan Bewa v. Ansar-ud-din (4), where it was held that the lien of a widow in possession does not depend upon any such agreement but upon the fact of her being in possession of her husband's property for the satisfaction of her dower, provided she obtained possession of the property in question lawfully and without force or fraud.

There is no difficulty as to the interpretation of what their Lordships of the Privy Council actually say in Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (1). The passage runs thus:—"Naturally the idea of payment of interest on the deferred portion of the dower does not enter into the conception of the parties. But the dower ranks as a debt, and the wife is entitled, along with other creditors, to have it satisfied on the death of the husband out of his estate. Her right, however, is no greater than that of any other unsecured creditor, except that if she lawfully, with the express or implied consent of the husband, or his other heirs, obtains possession of the whole or part of his estate, to satisfy her claim with the rents and issues accruing therefrom, she is entitled to retain such possession until it is satisfied. This is called the widow's lien for dower, and this is the only creditor's lien of the Muesalman Law which has received recognition in the British Indian Courts and at this Board." In that case, however, the only question for determination before the Judicial Committee was whether the widow in possession was entitled to any interest or compensation in respect of her unpaid dower, and the arguments on either side were concentrated on that point. So far as it appears, the widow's right to remain in possession until her dower was satisfied was not disputed, at any rate, before the Privy Council, and the fact in that case was that she had been allowed by the other heirs to take or remain in possession of the whole estate to satisfy her claim for dower. The cases reported in Ameer-con-nissa v. Moorad-oon-nissa (16), Bebee Bachun v. Hamid Hossein (3), Sabjan Bewa v. Ansar-ud din (4) and Ramzan Ali Khan v. Asghari Begam (22) were all cited in connection with the point under consideration of the Judicial Committee as to the widow's right to interest or compensation in respect of her unpaid dower, and it seems to be clear from the report that their Lordships' attention was nowhere directed to any question relating to the circumstances under which the widow's right to remain in possession for satisfaction of the dower debt arose. Nor is there anything to show that they wanted to settle the controversy raised in India with respect to this question by the decision in Amanat un-nissa v. Bashir-un-nissa (5). As I shall presently point out, there is a clear preponderance of decisions in India opposed to the view enunciated in this Allahabad case, but which finds prima facie support from the passage in the judgment of the Privy Council above cited, if we were to take it literally and without reference to the question, which the Board was actually called upon to decide. In the absence of anything in that judgment to indicate that their Lordships intended to determine the question whether a Muhammadan widow who obtained possession of her husband's estate lawfully and without force or fraud in lieu of her dower is not entitled to retain her possession until her claim is satisfied, unless she had obtained such possession with the consent of her husband or of his other heirs, we shall not be justified in fastening upon the literal language of their observation, if we found that the view was opposed to Muhammadan Law as expounded in the British Indian Courts in a chain of decisions ranging over half a century with one or two solit exceptions, at least since the case of Ameer-oon-nissa v. Moorad un-nissa (16), which was decided by the Privy Council in 1855 in 6 Moore's Indian Appeals 211. In that case it was found that the husband did not impignorate the estate by the deed of dower; it was, nevertheless, held that the widow had a lien on her deceased husband's estate as being hypothecated for her dower and could either retain the property to the amount of her dower or alienate part of the estate in satisfaction of the claim. The parties in that case were Sheas and, so far as the widow's right to alienate part of the estate in satisfaction of her claim to dower is concerned, the Shea Law differs to some extent from the Sunnie Law. But the case is of importance, in so far as it appears that the heirs of the husband could not have consented to the widow obtaining possession, or remaining in possession, as they denied her status altogether. Yet it was held that she was entitled to remain in possession of her husband's property for the satisfaction of her dower. In Janee Khanum v. Amatool Fatima (17), which was a Sunnie case, it was held that a widow in possession of her husband's property, under a claim of dower, had a lien as against his other heirs; as regards money belonging to the estate of her husband she might appropriate it to her claim for dower and as regards other property she was entitled to a lien as security for the dower-debt. In that case the widow had been deprived of her possession by a decree of Court in a suit by the heirs. It was, nevertheless, held that she still retained her lien. The next is a decision of Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., and Jackson and Macpherson, JJ., in Woomatool Fatima Begam v. Meerunnissa Khanum (18), which is relied on by the Privy Council in Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (1) in support of the proposition that the widow in possession is entitled to a reasonable interest on the dower-debt or compensation if she is to render an account of the rents and profits. There it was laid down, after a consideration of the authorities on Muhammadan Law, including the Serjiyah and Macnaghten's Precedents of Marriage, etc., case XXIV, and Macnaghten's Precedents of Debts and Securities, case X, that the widow of a Mussalman in possession of her husband's estate, under a claim of dower, has a lien upon it, as against those entitled as heirs and is entitled to possession of it as against them until her claim for dower is satisfied. This right is not founded on any agreement with her co-heirs, or their consent, or the consent of her husband obtained in his lifetime. This is made specially clear from Macnaghten's case XXIV cited in the judgment. The learned Judges also cite a number of decisions, including the judgment of the Privy Council in Ameer oon nissa v. Moorad-oon-nissa (16) above referred to. They were quite conscious of the fact that that was a case between Sheas, for they go on to point out that "according to the Shea doctrine, the creditor has power to sell landed property to an amount sufficient to satisfy the dower without recourse to the public authorities;" but, "according to the Sunnie doctrine, the creditor has simply a lien on any land of the debtor, and cannot take them over so as to acquire an absolute title in satisfaction of the dower, without the consent of the heirs, or a decree of Court." This statement of the law clearly negatives the proposition that the consent of the heirs is necessary to create a widow's lien for dower.

In Ahmed Hossein v. Khodeja (19) Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., held again, sitting with Dwarkanath Mitter, J., that the widow was entitled to a lien for whatever dower remained due to her and that the heirs could not recover the property so long as any portion of the dower remained unsatisfied. So far as one can gather, he did not rest the widow's right on the fact of her being in possession. In any case that judgment does not in the least suggest that the widow, in order to acquire a valid lien, must have entered into possession with the consent of her husband's heirs. The same deduction is to be made from an earlier judgment of Sir Barnes Peacock reported on the margin of the above case, viz., Syud Atahur Ali v. Altaf Fatima (37). The case of Meer Meher Ally v. Musammat Amanee (38) also recognised the Muhammadan widow's lien for dower over the property of which she was in possession, in the sense that the lien must be satisfied like that of any other creditor before the estate is distributed among the heirs, not that she was entitled to any preference over the other creditors.

In the Allahabad High Court the question was fully considered in Syud Imdad Hossein v. Musammat Hosseinee Buksh (39) printed as an appendix to Balund Khan v. Musammat Janee (15) and the learned Judges then followed the ruling of Sir Barnes Peacock in Ahmed Hossein v. Khodeja (19) and also an earlier decision of the Allahabad High Court.

The Judicial Committee considered this question in a case arising among the Sunnies in Bebee Bachun v. Hamid Hossein (3). There no agreement by the husband to pledge the property for dower was proved and the widow was put in possession of the husband's estate after his death by the Collector inspite of the opposition of the other heirs. Their Lordships did not find it necessary to state whether this right of the widow's lien for dower was a lien strictly so called, although it was so stated in the judgment of Sir Barnes Peacock above referred to, but they say that whatever the right may be called, it appears to be founded on the power of the widow, as a creditor for her dower, to hold the property of her husband, of which she has lawfully, and without force or fraud, obtained possession until her debt is satisfied, with the liability to account to those entitled to the property, subject to the claim for the profits received. They did not say that it was necessary for the widow's right to arise that she should have obtained possession of the property with the consent of or under an agreement with her deceased husband or his heirs; if that were a necessary condition, her claim would not have been sustained upon the facts, though the co heirs did not for a long time after she obtained possession take any steps to dispossess her. It is also significant that they relied on their previous ruling in Ameer-oon-nissa v. Moorad-un-nissa (16) in support of the law as they enunciated it, (37) 10 W. R. 370.

(38) 11 W. R. 212.

(39) 2 N. W. P. H. C. R. 327.

Then reverting to the Allahabad High Court, in Ali Muhammad Khan v. Azizullah Khan (12), this lien was recognised, although the learned Judges were of opinion that it was a personal right and did not pass to the purchaser of the estate from the widow. In Azizullah Khan v. Ahmad Ali Khan (30) Mahmood, J., held that a Muhammadan widow lawfully in possession of her husband's estate occupied a position analogous to that of a mortgagee, whose possession could not be disturbed until the dower debt had been satisfied and that on the widow's death if the dower remained unsatisfied, her heirs were entitled to succeed her in the possession of the property. Mr. Justice Mahmood required as a condition of validity of the widow's right that she should be lawfully in possession, following in this connection the rulings of the Privy Council and the Allahabad High Court, and not that she should have obtained possession with the consent of her husband's heirs. This was in 1885. In Amani Begam v. Muhammad Karimullah (2) the law was enunciated to the same effect in a carefully considered judgment upon a review of the more important rulings.

The first clear note of dissent, so far as I can see, was expressed in Amanat un-nissa v. Bashir-un-nissa (5) referred to above. Edge, C. J., says: So far as we are aware, neither a Muhammadan widow nor any other creditor can give themselves a lien by taking possession, without the consent or the authority of the persons entitled, of property to the possession of which those other persons are entitled. If a Muhammadan widow entitled to dower has not obtained possession lawfully, that is, by contract with her husband, by his putting her into possession or by her being allowed, with the consent of the heirs, on his death to take possession in lieu of dower, and thus to obtain a lien for her dower, she cannot obtain that lien by taking possession, adversely to the other heirs, of property to the possession of which they, and she in respect of her share in the inheritance, are entitled. It would be otherwise if the heirs consented to her taking possession in order to acquire a lien." In no other case could the widow's possession be said to have been lawfully obtained within the meaning of the judgment of the Privy Council in Bebee Bachun v. Hamid Hossein (3). The learned Judges say that their conclusion is supported by the case of Musammat Wahid un-nissa v. Musammat Shubrattun (40), the decision in which was approved by their Lordships in the case of Bazayet Hossein v. Dooli Chund (24), and also by the decisions of the Allahabad High Court in Musammat Meerun v. Musammat Najeebun (41), Ali Muhammad Khan v. Azizullah Khan (12) and of the Calcutta High Court in Bibi Mehrun v. Musammat Kubeerun (42). Of these cases the decision in Bibi Mehrun v. Musammat Kubeerun (42) to some extent bears out the learned Judges. What was actually decided in that case, however, was that according to Muhammadan Law a simple contract for a money payment in lieu of dower did not necessarily give the wife a lien over her husband's property. But it is observed that "if on the death of her husband the heirs allow her to get possession of any of his property, and to hold it in lieu of payment of what may be due to her under the contract, she will have a lien on that as against the heirs." It does not appear that the case of a widow lawfully in possession without the consent of the heirs was specifically before them. The authority they refer to—the decision in Meer Meher Ally v. Musammat Amanee (38)—only held that a widow having a lien was not entitled to any special charge on the estate or preference of any sort as against the other creditors, and the learned Judges do not profess to lay down the conditions under which the widow's lien arises under the Muhammadan Law. In Musammat Wahid un nissa v. Musammat Shubrattun (40) the only point which was decided was that a Muhammadan widow had no lien on any specific property of her deceased husband so as to enable her to follow that property, as in the case of a mortgage, into the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value from one of the heirs of the husband. Sir Charles Hobhouse, J., who examined the previous decisions at some length, stated their effect in cases where the widow was in possession in these words: "They are, I think, all of them cases in which dower being admitted to be due, the widow was or had been in possession of the whole estate, and in which the heirs sought to oust the widow without having previously paid the amount of the dower or debt. Now, it seems to me that in such a case under the Muhammadan Law, had it not been the case of a widow especially, but that of any other creditor, such creditor, equally with the widow, would have been entitled to hold over the estate of which he was in possession until his debt had been paid off." Further on, no doubt he gives us his own opinion, founded on Macnaghten's statement of the Muhammadan Law as to mortgages and pawns, that the seizure of the property must be given by the owner and that the consent of the husband or his heirs after his death was necessary for the validity of a lien for dower where the widow is in possession. Loch, J., treating the question entirely from the Muhammadan point of view observes:—"It may be here remarked that the decisions of this Court appear almost invariably to have treated the widow in possession of her husband's property in the light of a mortgagee or pawnee so far as her dower is concerned, and have held that she could not be deprived of possession till her claim for dower is satisfied." He does not say that such possession must have been obtained with the consent of her husband or his heirs. In Bazayet Hossein v. Dooli Chund (24) Sir Barnes Peacock delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee approved of the ruling in Musammat Wahid un nissa v. Musammat Shubrattun (40) on the question for decision before them in these words:—"Their Lordships entirely concur in the view of the law which was laid down in the case cited from the 6th Bengal Law Reports and the other authorities cited, and are of opinion that a creditor of a deceased Mahomedan cannot follow his estate into the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value to whom it has been alienated by his heir at-law." One cannot presume that he wanted to endorse any statement that where a widow was lawfully in possession of her husband's estate she would not acquire a valid lien unless she had obtained such possession with the consent of her husband or his heirs, for as I have shown, he was himself a party to more than one ruling in which, as Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court, he had upheld the lien of a Mohammadan widow in possession without requiring that such possession should have been obtained with the consent of her husband or his heirs. The case of Musammat Meerun v. Musammat Naeebun (41) does contain a dictum which bears out the view expounded in Amanat un nissa v. Bashir-un nissa (6), but I do not find that either the previous decisions or the authorities on Muhammadan Law are discussed there and case No. XXXVII of Macnaghten's Precedents of Marriage, etc., referred to in the judgment only lays down that a widow cannot take possession of her husband's landed property on her own authority in virtue of her claim for dower without a judicial order.

The view of the law stated in Amanat-un nissa v. Bashir un-nissa (6) was canvassed in that Court in Ali Bakhsh v. Alah Dad Khan (9) and distinctly disapproved; so also the Calcutta decision in Sabian Bewa v. Ansir ud-din (4) dissented from that ruling, holding that it was sufficient if the widow entered into possession lawfully and without force or fraud and that it was not necessary that she should have done so under an agreement with her husband or his heirs [see also Umatul Mehdi v. Kulsum (21)]. The only Arabic treatise on Muhammadan Law to which my attention is drawn as containing a direct dictum on this question is Khazinat ul riwayah, chapter on dower; the passage is to this effect:—"The woman is entitled to take the amount of her dower from the estate of her deceased husband without the consent of his heirs, if the estate consists of dirhams and dinars" (i.e., current coins); "but if it consists of property which needs be sold, so much will be sold as is necessary and her dower will be paid thereout, whether that property has been bequeathed by her husband or not, and she will take it," (i. e., her dower) "without the consent of the heirs." I am not aware that this book has been printed, but it seems to be in vogue in British India as it is relied on in Majmuoa Fatawa of Muhammad Abdul Hye of Lucknow on this very point. (See page 86, 1882, Lucknow Edition.) I would not have felt justified in basing my opinion solely on this treatise, but I cite the quotation to show that it is in support of the view taken by the Courts in the majority of the cases referred to and also in accord with the principles of Muhammadan Law on the subject.

All the authorities suggest that the Muhammadan widow's lien for dower on property of which she is in possession arises not by virtue of any agreement with her husband or his heirs but by the provisions of Muhammadan Law relating to the administration of a deceased person's estate. That is why it stands on the same footing as any other creditor's lien. If a widow or any other creditor of a deceased Muhammadan acquired the rights of a pledgee or pawnee by reason of being placed in possession of the deceased person's property by the consent of his heirs, then she or he would have a preferential right relatively to the rights of other creditors of the deceased. If it is not as a pledgee, properly so called, that a widow having a claim for dower has a lien over property in her possession, then there can be no necessity under the Muhammadan Law that she should have obtained possession with the consent of the heirs. What is called a widow's lien in this connection is founded on the rule of Muhammadan Law as to the administration of a deceased person's estate, viz., that a creditor who has obtained possession of the property of the deceased debtor should be allowed to continue in possession until the debt is satisfied. Supposing the estate is insolvent, he is not entitled to ask that his debt should be paid in full before the estate is distributed pro rata among the other creditors. The right of the widow or of any other creditor similarly situated is no more than this, that the heirs are not entitled to recover the property in their possession until the debt is satisfied, because under the Muhammadan Law the distribution of the estate is postponed till after payment of all debts owing by the deceased, including the dower due to his wife. This principle is laid down in every authoritative text book of Muhammadan law. In the Serjiyah it is stated: "There belong to the property of a person deceased four successive duties to be performed by the Magistrate: First, funeral ceremony and burial, etc.; next, the discharge of his just debts from the whole of his remaining effects; then, the payment of his legacies out of a third of what remains after his debts are paid; and, lastly, the distribution of the residue amongst his successors, etc." See also Macnaghten's Principles of Muhammadan Law, Chapter 1, section 1, paragraph 5. It is upon that principle that case X in Macnaghten's Precedents of Debts and Securities is based. There the question is put: "A man dies being indebted to his wife for her dower. Has she a lien on the personal property left by her husband in satisfaction of such dower in preference to the other heirs?" [See Woomatool Fatima Begam v. Meerunnissa Khanum (18).] "Answer: "If the other heirs pay the widow the amount of her dower, she has no claim on the property left by her husband, except for her legal share of the inheritance; and if they do not pay her the amount of her dower, she has, in the first instance, a prior claim, on account of her dower, on the property left by her husband, whether real or personal. The residue, after her claim is satisfied, will be divided between her and the other heirs, according to their respective shares of inheritance." And in Macnaghten's Precedents of Marriage, etc., Case XXIV, it is said that "there is distinction between money and other property in cases of dower, viz., that the widow is at liberty to take the former description of property over which she has absolute power; but as to the other property, she is entitled to a lien on it as security for the debt, and it does not become her property absolutely without the consent of the heirs or a judicial decree. Where the debt is large and the property is small, the former necessarily absorbs the latter, in spite of any objection urged by the heirs, who, until they pay the debt, have no legal claim against the creditor in possession to deliver up the estate." The ruling of the Judicial Committee in Bebee Bachun v. Hamid Hossein (3), however, requires, following a number of rulings of the Indian Courts on this point, that the widow's possession will only be recognised if she obtained it lawfully and without force or fraud. If one may say so, I can quite understand such a limitation, for it is against the policy of the law that possession obtained unlawfully or by use of force or fraud should be recognised by the Courts, although the limitation is not laid down in so many words in the texts on Muhammadan Law. But to go further and to say that the possession must be taken with the consent of the heirs would be entirely to ignore the principle on which the right of the widow in possession is based. She is also one of the heirs under the Muhammadan Law in addition to her being a creditor to the extent of the dower which remains unpaid. If she peaceably enters into possession, such possession would undoubtedly be lawful by virtue of her position as an heir, if not also as a creditor. Suppose, on the other hand, she entered into possession under a false claim of gift or purchase, that possession might not justify her in claiming a lien for her unpaid dower any more than if she had obtained possession by force.

My answer, therefore, to the first question will be that a Muhammadan widow, who is lawfully, and without force or fraud, in possession of her husband's property, is entitled to retain possession of such property as against his other heirs until her dower is satisfied, even though such possession was not obtained with the consent (express or implied) of, or under an agreement with, her husband or his other heirs, and that such property would not be divided among the heirs until the dower debt is satisfied. In order that the second question, whether a vendee from a Muhammadan widow of the property of which she is in possession in lieu of dower has the same power as she had in respect of the dower due to her, may be answered, we have to consider whether the right of the widow in possession of her husband's property in lieu of her dower to retain such possession until her dower is satisfied is transferable at all or whether it is a purely personal right. There is no express text of Muhammadan Law, so far as one can see, dealing with the point. Macnaghten in the passage already cited speaks of such a right as a security for payment of the dower debt. The rulings of the Courts are almost equally divided. In Azizullah Khan v. Ahmad Ali Khan (30) Mahmood, J., describes the position of the widow as analagous to that of a mortgagee, while in Ali Muhammad Khan v. Azizullah Khan (12) it was treated as a personal right and did not pass to a purchaser of the estate from the widow. In the more recent rulings in that Court Chief Justice Edge in Hadi Ali v. Akbar Ali (11) calls it a purely personal right which did not survive to her heirs; and it is also described in Muzoffar Ali Khan v. Parbati (10), where they say that such a right is not transferable and is nothing more than an interest in property restricted in its enjoyment to the owner personally; in Wahid Ali Khan v. Tori Ram (43) it was held to be heritable right and one capable of being transferred. The same appears to be the view taken in Tahirunnissa v. Nawab Hasan (44). In Ghulam Ali v. Saqir-ul nissa Bibi (45) it was ruled that the widow's right, though analagous to that of a mortgagee, was not in all respects that of a usufructuary mortgagee so as to preclude her from suing for her dower. In Bombay the view that prevailed is that it is not a mere personal right; it is a substantive right which is heritable and transferable. [See Majidmian v. Bibi Saheb Jan (13).] In this Court the only question that arose in this connection at all was whether the widow's lien for dower would give her any right as against a purchaser in execution of a decree for sale passed on a mortgage executed by the husband and it was answered in the negative, the learned Judges holding that the lien did not stand on the same footing as that arising from a mortgage. [See Ameer Ammal v. Sankaranarayanan Chetty (23)] In Nawab Mahomed Ameenuddeen Khan v. Mozuffer Hossein Khan (27), which was a case from Calcutta, their Lordships of the Privy Council upheld the decree of the High Court which was to this effect, that the heirs of the widow in possession who had succeeded her on her death could not be ousted from possession unless the dower was paid. It must be noted, however, that no objection was taken before the Privy Council to this part of the decree. On principle, the right of the widow to retain possession till the satisfaction of her dower debt must, in my opinion, be held as against the claims of the heirs to be a right capable of descending to her heirs and of being transferred by her along with the right to dower. The law gives her the right not because she is the widow of her deceased husband but in her capacity as one of his creditors. When the widow dies, all her rights of the nature of or in connection with property descend under the Muhammadan Law to her heirs, and there seems to be no reason to make an exception to the rule with respect to this right of heirs, which it may be mentioned would often be a very valuable right. Take the case where the widow has been in possession for more than three years and dies before the dower-debt is satisfied; the heirs would not be able to recover the unsatisfied portion of the dower if the right to retain possession did not descend to them. Similarly, the widow can transfer a dower-debt and I can conceive of no good reason why she should not be able to transfer her right to remain in possession of the property of which she has obtained possession as a means of realising that debt. It may well be that she does not acquire all the rights of a mortgagee properly so called by virtue of this lien. For instance, she may not be entitled to sue for the sale of the property to realise the debt [see Ghulam Ali v. Sagir-ul nissa Bibi (45)], or to claim preference as against an auction-purchaser in execution of a decree passed on a mortgage executed by her husband. Ameer Ammal v. Sankaranarayanan Chetty (23). But to the limited extent that this right is recognised as security for payment of the dower-debt, there is no reason why it could not be passed to a transferee of the dower-debt or transmitted to her heirs. It is well settled law [see Asher v. Whitlock (46), the judgment of the Privy Council in Sundar v. Parbati (25) and Ibrahim Rowthen v. Sangaram Chetty (47)] that a person in peaceable possession of land, as against every one but the true owner, has an interest capable of being inherited, devised or conveyed.

Then the next question is:—Has a vendee from a Muhammadan widow in possession of her husband's property for payment of her dower the same right as the widow in respect of the dower due to her, in cases where the widow has alienated the property and the alienation is impeached by the other heirs. As pointed out above, the widow has no power to sell the property in her possession and, therefore, the sale itself will not bind her husband's heirs. She, however, could transfer her right to possession along with the dower-debt and in my opinion the alienation must be upheld to that extent. The principle of law in this connection, which is based on justice, equity and good conscience, is well established and is recognised in section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act in these terms:—"Where a person erroneously represents that he is authorized to transfer certain immoveable property and professes to transfer such property for consideration, such transfer shall, at the option of the transferee, operate on any interest which the transferor may acquire in such property at any time during which the contract of transfer subsists." I would, therefore, answer the second question in the affirmative; that is to say, the purchaser, to the extent of the unpaid portion of the widow's dower, is entitled to retain possession of the property sold to him as against the heirs until the dower-debt is satisfied, but that the sale itself is invalid and not binding on her heirs.

OLDFIELD, J.—I agree.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—It has been argued that the two questions submitted for the consideration of the Full Bench have been too broadly worded and that the facts of the case do not demand answers for both these questions. That is a matter which need not be discussed. We have to answer the questions which apparently in the opinion of the referring Judges arise for consideration. Upon the first question the position is this. There is a large body of opinion in Calcutta and in Allahabad to the effect that a widow of a deceased Muhammadan, who takes peaceful possession of his property, is entitled to retain it until her dower is paid. These early cases only impose two conditions: The possession must be lawful, and it should not have been acquired by fraud or by force. The few non-judicial authorities to which Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar drew our attention seem to support this view. Sir Roland Wilson in his Muhammadan Law strongly advocates it. Mr. Macnaghten in his precedents takes the same view. In Ameer-oon-nissa v. Moorad-oon nissa (16), although the question was not directly decided, the desires suggested by the Judicial Committee is not quite consistent with the view that possession should be obtained with the consent of the heirs. At page 219 of the volume the opinion of the Moulvi is quoted, which is to the effect that a Muhammadan lady can without recourse to Courts transfer the property which she has taken in lieu of dower. This decision was considered by the Judicial Committee in Bebee Bachun v. Hamid Hossein (3). In that case possession was given to the widow by the Collector. Certainly it was not a case in which possession commenced with the consent of the heirs. Here again there is no limitation in the judgment to the effect that unless possession is taken with the consent of the heirs the widow will not be entitled to retain it. The last Privy Council case, Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (1), for the first time as far as the Judicial Committee is concerned stated that possession should be obtained not only lawfully and without fraud or force but should have been "with the consent of the heirs of the deceased." It was suggested that this reservation about consent was altogether unnecessary for the decision of the case before the Board. On the face of it, it looks as if this contention is right. It is necessary to consider, therefore, whether it is a deliberate pronouncement by the Judicial Committee on the question. For that purpose, I shall to some extent examine the case-law in Bengal and Allahabad. In Calcutta the first reported case brought to our notice is Janee Khanum v. Amatool Fatima Begam (17). That was a case in which it was sought to distinguish between the Shia and the Sunni doctrine as regards the right supervening on taking possession. Consent is not mentioned as a factor to be taken into account. In Ahmed Hossein v. Khodeja (19), and in the case at page 370 of that volume which is appended as a foot-note, there could not have been any question of consent. Bibee Tajim v. Syud Wahed Ali (20) also does not speak of consent. Umatul Mehdi v. Kulsum (21) is another decision to the same effect. In Sibjan Bewa v Ansar ud-Din (4) Mr. Justice Mookerjee very elaborately examined this theory of the necessity for the consent of the heirs. He criticises adversely the view of Sir John Edge in Amant-un-nissa v. Bashir-un-nsisa (6) and points out that it would be meaningless to import the idea of a consent where possession has been taken peacefully and without fraud. In Muhammad Shrafat v. Wahida Sultan Begum (7) that view was upheld. On the other hand Bibi Tasliman v. Kasiman (5) adopted the view enunciated in Amanat-un-nissa v. Bashir-un-Nissa (6). These are all the Calcutta cases. As regards Allahabad, in Musammat Meerun v. Musammat Najeebun (41) it was held that possession taken without fraud would suffice to unable the widow to retain possession and to get her dower paid out of the income. In Amani Begam v. Muhammad Karimullah (2), which defines what lawful possession is, there is no suggestion that it should have been obtained with the consent of the heirs. Sir John Edge in Amanat un-nissa v. Bashir-un-nissa (6) stated the law thus:— "If a Muhammadan widow entitled to dower has not obtained possession lawfully, that is, by contract with her husband, by his putting her into possession or by her being allowed with the consent of the heirs, on his death, to take possession in lieu of dower, and thus to obtain a lien for her dower, she cannot obtain that lien by taking possession, adversely to the other heirs, of property to the possession of which they, and she in respect of her share in the inheritance, are entitled. It would be otherwise if the heirs consented to her taking possession in order to acquire a lien." In later cases in Allahabad this view was not followed. In Ali Bakhsh v. Alah Dad Khan (9) the learned Judges distinctly differed from Amanat-un nissa v. Bashir un nissa (6). It is with reference to these authorities that we have to deal with the dictum of the Judicial Committee. Sir John Edge was one of the members of the Board who heard Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (1). The Rt. Honourable Mr. Ameer Ali was another member. Sibjan Bewa v. Ansar-ud-Din (4), in which the view of Sir John Edge in Amanat-un-nissa v. Bashir-un-nissa (5) has been criticised, was quoted at the Bar. Under these circumstances having regard to the constitution of the Bench and having regard to the fact that the view opposed to Amanat-un-nissa v. Bashir-un-nissa (6) was placed before the Judicial Committee, is it open to us to say that the statement of the law in Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (1) is an obiter dictum which is not binding on Indian Courts. So far as Madras is concerned, there is no course of decisions on the question. In Calcutta and in Allahabad this dictum may affect vested rights and may lead to some unsettlement. There is one thing to be said in favour of the dictum of the Privy Council. By taking possession for dower the dower-debt is placed in a higher category than ordinary debts. It really amounts to giving preference to one creditor over others. It may not be unreasonable under these circumstances that the law should insist that the consent of the other heirs should be obtained for such an exceptional treatment of a debt. There is another consideration which Mr. Narasimha Aiyangar pressed before us. Supposing the dower-debt had become barred by limitation, and the widow takes possession more than three years after it had become due. If she enters into possession, she would be stipulating for the payment of a barred debt in preference to the payment of running debts. In these circumstances, it may be unreasonable to lay down that without the consent of the other heirs such a preference should be obtained. On the other side it was argued that the object of the law in permitting the wife to take and retain possession of her husband's property is to put a check on the tendency to divorce the wife without proper reasons. This would be defeated if consent predicated as a condition precedent. Further in most cases the amount of the dower will be disputed by the other heirs and they are not likely to permit the widow to assume possession. None of these considerations have been discussed in Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (1) and I am, therefore, not prepared to differ from the Officiating Chief Justice, whose view in such matters is entitled to great respect, in holding that the Judicial Committee did not intend to decide definitely that possession taken without consent will not give the widow the right to retain it until the dower debt is discharged.

Now I go to the second question. I feel no doubt on this point that our answer should be in the affirmative. Assuming that the widow has taken possession with the consent of the heirs and lawfully, I fail to see why her remedies should not be transferred. There is considerable authority for the proposition that it can be inherited, Kummur-oon-nissa Begam v. Mahomed Hussun (26), Panchanan Bose v. Gurudas Roy (48), Majidmian v. Bibi Saheb Jan (13), Ali Bakhsh v. Allah Dad Khan (9), Tahirunnissa v. Nawab Hasan (44) and Basir Ali v. Nazir Ali (31). Against these there is Ali Muhammad Khan v. Azizullah Khan (12), Hadi Ali v. Akbar Ali (11) and Muzoffar Ali Khan v. Parbati (10). The Muhammadan text-book writers including Macnaghten and Sir Roland Wilson seem to incline to the view that the right can be transferred and inherited. No doubt under the English law, ordinarily speaking, a lien is not transferable. See 19 Halsbury, page 2. But that is because a lien has been regarded as a personal privilege. Even in England there are exceptions in favour of certain classes of lien-holders. But I do not think that the right to retain possession and to pay herself out of the proceeds, which a Muhammadan widow acquires, is of the same kind as the lien considered in English cases. It is more in the nature of a charge on the property, because as I said before, the right to pay herself out of the income is incident to the possession taken by a widow. Maina Bibi v. Wasi Ahmad (49), on which Mr. Narasimha Aiyangar strongly relied, does not really decide the question. That was a case in which a decree was obtained by the heirs against the widow for possession of the property which she had taken in lieu of dower. The decree provided that on payment to the widow of the amount due, she should deliver possession and that in default of payment within a particular time her right to the property should become absolute. The amount was not paid in time. Thus under the decree she became the absolute owner. Thereafter she made a gift of the property to her daughters. The question was considered whether this deed of gift, if otherwise unenforceable, conveyed to the daughters a right to the dower. It was held that as the right to the dower and the right to retain possession were not specifically transferred, the donees were not entitled to stand in the shoes of the donor in that behalf. One thing is clear from that judgment, namely, that the dower debt was placed in the same category as a mortgage-debt. It is also clear that by the failure to pay money in time the widow acquired a right to the property by virtue of the decree, and not by virtue of the right she had to retain possession for dower. It is further clear that by the deed of gift there was not and could not have been any transfer of the right to the dower. These considerations do not affect the present case. I have looked into Exhibit I, and I find that the widow transferred the property for her dower-debt. The principle of subrogation is well recognised in India, and the principle of equity which compels a plaintiff to discharge a lawful debt before recovering possession has been recognised in cases of sales by widows, by managers and by co-tenants. I fail to see why that principle is not applicable to the case of a sale by a widow. The sale proceeds were applied to pay the dower-debt. Therefore the vendee stood in the shoes of the vendor to the extent of the rights which she had in the property sold. I am, therefore, of opinion that the right which the widow had to remain in possession for her dower is capable of being transferred.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to certain plots of land which form part of the Mahal of which the defendants are the superior proprietors. The plaintiff was in cultivatory possession of the said plots. The defendants got him ejected through the Revenue Court. The plaintiff sued for possession of the said plots on the allegation that he had a heritable and transferable right therein and that the defendants had no right to eject him from the same

The Courts below dismissed the claim. Their finding is that the plaintiff had no under-proprietary rights in the said plots.

It appears that Saadat Khan was originally the owner of the Zemindari share to which the disputed plots appertain. His right, title and interest were sold by auction in execution of a decree obtained by Tokhan Sah against him in 1874. In the sale proclamation then issued Saadat Khan was described as owning a 5-annas 4-pies ancestral share in that village and as holding 70 bighas of sir land in his cultivation and in that of his two sons (Exhibit D4). At the time of the sale a right of occupancy in the sir land was expressly reserved. That right was of the kind referred to in section 5 of the Oudh Rent Act (XIX of 1868) then in force. It was not a transferable right and could not, therefore, be under-proprietary. The Courts below were unable to say from the evidence that the plots in dispute formed part of the said 70 bighas of sir land. All that the evidence showed was that plot No. 26/2 which forms a part of plot No. 39/1, new khasra, and plot No. 29, old khasra, which has now been re-placed by No. 44, new khasra, were treated as forming part of the said 70 bighas of sir land in some previous litigation (Exhibits 4 and 6). No Khitauni or Jamabandi of the old Settlement has been filed. The khasras filed are not enough to indicate what plots are comprised in the said sir area. A definite conclusion is not, therefore, possible in the circumstances. The fact remains that even if these plots formed part of the said 70 bighas of the sir land in which a right of occupancy was reserved to Saadat Khan at the time of the sale his son, the plaintiff-appellant, can have no higher position than that which was assigned to his father. He holds no under-proprietary right and cannot, therefore, be restored to possession by the Civil Court.

As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mohammad Abul Husan Khan v. Prag (1), in cases to which the U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901) applies, the Courts of Revenue have the exclusive jurisdiction to determine what is the status of a tenant and what are the special or other terms upon which such tenant holds. The Civil Courts can decide whether or not he holds the proprietary or under-proprietary rights therein but can go no further. They cannot set aside an ejectment proceeding or determine its validity if the interest affected is not under-proprietary.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

A decree in a mortgage suit which provides that in the event of the mortgaged properties fetching a price insufficient to meet the mortgage debt, there shall be a personal decree against the other properties of the mortgagor, is not a mortgage-decree in the strict sense of the term. [p. 923, col. 2.]

If a mortgagee brings a suit upon his mortgage bond and it is found that the mortgage is invalid, the mortgagee can realise his dues from other properties of the mortgagor, unless there is an express stipulation in the bond that the mortgage-debt is to be realised from the mortgaged properties alone. JUDGMENT.

CHAPMAN, J.—In this case the mortgagee, in September 1910, obtained a decree in a suit brought by him upon his mortgage bond. The decree was in the terms of the compromise, which was to the effect that the amount agreed upon should be recovered from the mortgaged properties and that if that should prove insufficient, the balance should be recovered from the other properties of the mortgagor. Upon the mortgaged properties being brought to sale, it was found that the mortgage was void under section 46 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act of 1908, which provides that no transfer by a raiyat of his right in his holding or any portion thereof by mortgage or lease for any period which exceeds or might in any possible event exceed five years shall be valid to any extent.

The two lower Courts have agreed that the mortgage was invalid by reason of the provisions of this Act. The decree-holder then filed a petition asking for an order that the other properties of the judgment-debtor should be put up to sale in accordance with the compromise above referred to. To this the judgment-debtor objected on two grounds: firstly, on the ground that the other properties could not be brought to sale unless there was a second decree directing that sale, and, secondly, on the ground that it was not open to the decree-holder to proceed against these properties in execution of his decree but that in order to do so he must bring a suit upon the personal covenant contained in the mortgage-bond. These objections have been overruled by both the lower Courts and the case now comes before us in second appeal.

Of the cases cited before us there are only two directly bearing upon this point, viz., the case of Firibhu Narain Singh v. Baldeo Misra (1) and the case reported as Behari Lal v. Basheshar Dayal (2), where it was held that if the mortgaged property cannot be sold in execution of a mortgage decree, no decree under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act can be granted. Both these cases were decided by learned Judges sitting alone; and the former case appears to have been dissented from in a later decision reported as Pirbhu Narain Singh v. Amir Singh (3). The law on this subject has been discussed at length in the case of Javerbhai Jorabhai v. Gordhan Narsi (4). There can be no doubt that at any time, up to the sale of the mortgaged property, the mortgagee can abandon his claim against the mortgaged property and ask for a personal decree and bring to sale the other properties of the mortgagor without first bringing to sale the mortgaged properties. It is quite clear that if the mortgagee brings a suit upon his mortgage-bond and it is found that the mortgage is invalid, it would be most inequitable to allow the mortgagor to defeat the claim of the mortgagee and to deprive him of money which is obviously due to him under a personal covenant to pay, and that the mortgagee should be prevented from realizing his dues, unless there is an express stipulation in the bond that the mortgage debt is to be realized from the mortgaged properties and from the mortgaged properties alone. It is quite clear that there was no such stipulation in the present case. In fact there is a clear provision in the compromise decree that in the event of the mortgaged properties fetching a price insufficient to cover the mortgage debt there must be a personal decree against the other properties of the mortgagor. It has been argued that this was a mortgage decree and can only be executed as such. The fact is that it is not a mortgage decree in the strict sense of the term, inasmuch as it contains a direction that the other properties of the mortgagor should be proceeded against, and that is not the form of a mortgage decree provided by the Transfer of Property Act. The ordinary procedure is to draw up a personal decree against the mortgagor only in the event of the sale proceeds proving insufficient. In my opinion although the correct procedure would have been to provide in express terms that there was to be a personal decree in the event of the mortgage being found to be invalid, yet I consider that such decrees should not be strictly interpreted in India and that justice should be administered between the parties, provided that neither party suffers by such a course. In my opinion the proper course to adopt in this case is to give the compomise decree a liberal construction. I am of opinion that the decree-holder is entitled to proceed against the other properties of the mortgagor judgment-debtor in the event of the mortgage being found to be invalid.

I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

While proceedings for the sale of certain mortgaged property were pending, the mortgagor executed leases of certain land included in the mortgaged property for 40 years. The mortgagee purchased the property in auction sale and applied under Order XXI, rule 97, of the Civil Procedure Code for possession of the same. The lower Court held that the leases were collusive, but declined to interfere with the possession of the lessees and passed an order under Order XXI, rule 96, of the Code that it should be proclaimed that the interest of the mortgagor had been transferred to the auction-purchaser:

Held, (1) that the order of the lower Court amounted to an order dismissing the application of the decree-holder under Order XXI, rule 99, of the Civil Procedure Code:

(2) that the auction-purchaser, who was a party other than the judgment-debtor against whom an order had been made under Order XXI, rule 99, of the Civil Procedure Code, had no right of appeal and that his remedy was to institute a suit against the occupiers for their ejectment.

Mr. Niamatullah, for the Appellant.

Mr. Basudeo Lal, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 3.

JUDGMENT.—Muhammad Husain had executed a simple mortgage. A suit was brought on the basis of this mortgage and a decree was passed against Muhammad Husain declaring a lien on the mortgaged property. While proceedings for the sale of the mortgaged property were pending, Muhammad Husain executed leases of certain land included in the mortgaged property in favour of his own relations. These leases were executed on the 7th February 1918. Muhammad Husain apparently claimed to have cultivated the land leased continuously for over twelve years. On the 21st October 1918 the property in question was sold and purchased by Musammat Bibi Saidunnissa, the mortgagee and decree-holder. When she endeavoured to obtain possession over the land transferred by these leases, the lessees opposed her possession. She, therefore, applied under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 97, for possession of the property. The learned Subordinate Judge has decided that the leases in question, which are for a period of 40 years, are collusive and not executed in good faith. He has declined to uphold these leases, but he has decided that, inasmuch as the mortgagor had at the time when he made those leases the right to lease the property for a period as long as seven years in the ordinary manner, he should not interfere with the possession of the present occupiers. He, therefore, passed an order under Order XXI, rule 96, that it should be proclaimed that the interest of the mortgagor had been transferred to the auction-purchaser. In other words, he decided under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 95, that the auction-purchaser should be given the same rights to collect the rent as were reserved to the judgment-debtor under the leases of the 7th February 1918. The auction-purchaser appeals.

I first have to look at the nature of the order of the learned Subordinate Judge. The application before him was an application under Order XXI, rule 97. He could have allowed that application under rule 98 or dismissed it under rule 99. He certainly did not allow the application under Order XXI, rule 98. Can it be said that he dismissed it under Order XXI, rule 99? I consider that he did dismiss it under Order XXI, rule 99, for he refused to dispossess the occupiers who were persons other than the judgment debtor and passed an order prejudicial to them. He went out of his way to pass an order under Order XXI, rule 96, declaring the auction purchaser's rights. But that order is not per se prejudicial to the occupiers, although there is a portion of the judgment which is prejudicial to them inasmuch as it would appear to lay down that they can be ejected after seven years. However, in so far as the order goes, it is not prejudicial to them. Now in these circumstances, has the auction purchaser the right to appeal? I am of opinion that she has not such a right. She applied under Order XXI, rule 97, for the dispossession of the occupiers of the land. She has failed to obtain that relief. In other words, her application has been dismissed under Order XXI, rule 99. So the provisions of Order XXI, rule 103, have force. She is a party not being a judgment-debtor against whom an order has been made under rule 99. Her remedy is to institute a suit to establish the right by which she claims the present possession of the property. It is open to her to institute a suit against the present occupiers for their ejectment, on the ground that they are holding under fraudulent and collusive leases alleging that the circumstance that the mortgagor might have given them valid transfers cannot avail them when as a matter of fact he gave them invalid transfers. But her remedy appears to me to be by a regular suit and not by way of appeal.

I, therefore, dismiss this appeal but in the circumstances of the case without costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Landlord and tenant—Agricultural holding, what is—Cess Return, entry in, value of—Holding partly homestead and partly cultivated.

Where there is a question whether certain land is agricultural land within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the evidence of persons who have known the land for years and have taken part in the cultivation of it, coupled with a Cess Return in which the land is described as agricultural, would warrant the conclusion that the land originally was agricultural, and this conclusion is not contradicted by the fact that in a subsequent chitta the land is described as bastu land, nor is it inconsistent with the fact that a portion of the land is occupied by a homestead. [p. 926, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Rajshahye, dated the 25th of January 1918, affirming the decree of the Munsif, Boalia, dated the 25th of September 1916.

Babus Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhury and Krishna Kamal Maitra, for the Appellants.

Babu Jatindra Mohan Choudhury, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question for determination in this appeal is whether the holding, which is within the municipal limits of Rajshahye town, is an agricultural holding governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act, or whether it is governed by the Transfer of Property Act.

The following facts have been found, namely, that the defendants have been in possession for three generations of this holding and that for about 50 years they have got their homestead in a portion of the land. The trial Court found that it was an agricultural holding on the basis of an entry in a Cesse Return filed by the landlord and on the evidence that some of the land used to be cultivated. That Court also held that even if the holding was non-agricultural, the defendants had acquired a permanent right inasmuch as the holding had apparently been inherited from grandfather to grandson and the rent had been the same. Upon both the grounds he dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

In the Appeal Court the learned Judge held that so far as the second point was concerned, the case in Moharam Sheikh Chaprasi v. Telamuddin Khan (1) was distinguishable, inasmuch as in the case before him it had not been shown that the tenancy had been treated by the landlord as heritable and also because it had been found in the case in Moharam Sheikh Chaprasi v. Telamuddin Khan (1) that the land had been let out for residential purposes. Except as above he affirmed the decision of the trial Court. He held that the case had been rightly decided on the basis of the Cess Return in which the holding was shown as an agricultural one. He is quite right in saying that if the holding was non-agricultural, it should have been entered in part 3 of the Cess Return, which refers to tenure-holders according to the definition of that term under the Cess Act.

The learned Vakil who has appeared for the appellants has contended that the learned Judge has not taken into account the Chitta, Exhibit I, dated 1270, in which this holding is described as bastu. He argues that although the land may have been cultivated and paddy may have been grown upon it, yet having regard to the fact that the Chitta was earlier in date then the Cess Return of 1900, there was no definite finding that the land had been treated as agricultural land from its inception. He strongly relied upon the finding of the learned Munsif that the origin of the holding had not been shown and he said that in order to be considered a raiyat as defind in the Bengal

AKULA ACHIAH v. CHALLAPALLI LAKSHMINARASIMHAM.

Tenancy Act it must be shown that the land was acquired for purposes of cultivation. His argument was that there was no finding to that effect and that, therefore, there ought to be a remand, and if necessary fresh evidence should be taken to ascertain as to what the character of the land was when it was first let out and also to consider the question as to whether it was cultivated as culturable land and for what period, and then to determine the question as to whether any occupancy right can be claimed by the defendants.

Having regard to that contention, I had the whole of the evidence placed before me relating to the question of cultivation. Several persons had been examined on that point, old people who had known the land from their childhood, some of whom had actually taken part in its cultivation and some of whom were near neighbours. That evidence, taken with the fact that in the Cess Return of 1900 the land is described as krishi chashi raiyate, that is, to my agricultural cultivated raiyati land, I think it may safely be held that the land was originally for agricultural purposes. The Chitta of 1270, which described it as bastu land, need not be taken as contradicting that fact. It is quite consistent with the fact that a portion of it was homestead land and a portion was agricultural land. Reference in this connection may be made to the case of Mohesh Chunder Gungopadhya v. Bisho Nath Doss (2), in which Mr. Justice Markby points out the view taken by Mr. Justice Bayley in a decision in Kalee Kishen Biswas v. Sreemutty Jankee (3) that there was a distinction between bastu land and land let out for the purpose of constructing a bashabari. Mr. Justice Bayley said that bastu land might be met with in ordinary cultivators' holdings, and Mr. Justice Markby said that he was not aware that that opinion had been dissented from in any case and that it would be a matter of surprise if a raiyat with an ordinary holding, having built his house upon a portion of it, were to find that although he had a right of occupancy as to the culturable land he had no right of occupancy as to the rest. I find also an earlier case decided by Mr. Justice Markby, where he points out the distinction between houses in towns and what are called homestead lands of raiyats engaged in agriculture. See Pogose v. Ra.oo (4). I am unable to hold that the Chitta in any way contradicts the argument based upon the description of this land as agricultural contained in the Cess Return.

It has also been pointed out to me that the learned Judge's finding that in the present case there has virtually been an enhancement of rent is not justified by the evidence. The learned Munsif held that the rent had not been varied, but it is unnecessary to go into the question having regard to what I have held, namely, that the holding is an agricultural one governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act.

This appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 17—Decree, ex parte, application to set aside—Deposit of decretal amount, when to be made.

When an application is made under section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act to set aside an ex parte decree, the deposit required by the section need not be made at the time of presenting the application. The provisions of the section not being mandatory, it would be a sufficient compliance therewith if the amount is deposited before the application is heard. [p. 927, col. 2.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Bezwada, in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 2760 of 1917, in Small Cause Suit No. 885 of 1917, dated the 27th November 1917.

Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the Petitioner.—Whatever may be the precise language of section 17 of Act IX of 1887, the Courts in the Mofussil have uniformly recognized payments made before the application to set aside the ex parte decree was heard as sufficient compliance with the section. The Madras High Court has held in Ramasami v. Kurisu (1) that the section is only directory and not mandatory. The view is supported by the analogous provisions of sections 4 to 6 of the Pensions Act. The decisions lay down that the Collector's certificate before judgment was sufficient.

Mr. T. Ramachandra Rao, for the Respondent, relied on the unambiguous term of section 17 and Jagan Nath v. Ohet Ram (2) and Somabhai v. Wadilal (3).

JUDGMENT.—In this case an ex parte decree was passed on the 27th July 1917. The defendant, alleging that he did not become aware of the decree till the 26th August 1917 and that the summons was not served on him personally, applied to set aside the ex parte decree. This was on the 29th August 1917. It is conceded that along with the petition, the amount of the decree was not deposited. It is said that it was deposited before the application was heard. We express no opinion as to whether this deposit after the time allowed for the application is valid or not. The only question before us is whether the provision in section 17 of Act IX of 1887 is directory or mandatory. Parker and Wilkinson, JJ., held in Ramasami v. Kurisu (1) that it was not mandatory. Mr. Justice Miller in Suryanaray na v. Ramanna (4) did not dissent from this view. So this decision of Parker and Wilkinson, JJ., has stood unchallenged in this Court for nearly thirty years, and we feel no doubt that the practice regarding the receipt of the deposit amount in the Mofussil Courts has been in consonance with that ruling. We would, therefore, have followed the ruling without assigning reasons, had it not been for the fact that Mr. Justice Ayling in the admission Court and Mr. Justice Krishnan in the final Court sitting as a single Judge have questioned the correctness of Ramasami v. Kurisu (1). If we may say so, the language of section 17 of the Mofussil Small Cause Courts Act does not seem to lend itself to the interpretation placed on it in Ramasami v. Kurisu (1). In Jogir Ahir v. Bishen Dayal Singh (5), Jogannnath v. Ohet Ram (2) and Somabhai v. Wadilal (3) the ruling of this Court has not been accepted as good law. But the interpretation is not without precedent. In regard to cases under the Pensions Act, which by sections 4 to 6 require a certificate of the Collector before the plaint is filed, it has been held that the production of the certificate before judgment would cure the defect. The same view was taken of the requirements of sections 92 and 93 of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the sanction of the Advocate-General or the Collector. Reference may also be made to suits for which the production of a succession certificate is necessary. These classes of cases supply an analogy for the liberal interpretation placed on the section in Ramasami v. Kurisu (1). Further, the policy of the Legislature in demanding payment is to enable the successful decree-holder to take out immediate execution. The relief in a small cause suit being expected to be a speedy and a summary one, the Legislature demands that the successful plaintiff should not be put off for a further period by not making the decree amount available to him for immediate execution. Therefore, although if the case had come before us for the first time, we would have taken the view which the plain language of section 17 suggests, having regard to the fact that the decision now questioned has been law in this Presidency for nearly 30 years, that there is nothing opposed to justice in the interpretation placed on the section by two learned Judges of this Court and that there are analogies which may justify the view taken in Ramasami v. Kurisu (1), we think it unnecessary to refer the matter for the consideration of a Full Bench.

We must reverse the order of the lower Court and remit the application for disposal in the light of the above observations. Costs will abide.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Partition, suit for—Disruption of family—Limitation—Burden of proof.

In a suit for partition of joint family property if the disruption of the joint family is proved, it is for the plaintiff to show that it took place within 12 years prior to the suit or that he had been in possession within that period.

Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Partabgarh, dated the 26th August 1918, upholding that of the Munsif, Partabgarh, dated the 23rd March 1918.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ram Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to the leasehold rights in certain plots of land held by Debi Dat and to certain groves and trees standing on some other plots in the village of Ramwapur. The allegations of the plaintiffs were that the said leasehold rights and trees were the joint property of the family, to which the parties belong, that Debi Dat was the head and manager of the family, that the plaintiffs became separate in mess and residence about eight or nine years prior to the suit and that they are entitled to a partition of a two-thirds share.

The defendants, who are descendants of Debi Dat, denied the title of the plaintiffs and pleaded that Debi Dat was living separate from other branches of the family, now represented by the plaintiffs, from 45 years and that the said property was his self-acquired and separate property.

The Courts below have found in favour of the defendants and dismissed the claim. Their finding is that separation had not taken place within twelve years prior to the suit and that the plaintiffs had not got any share of the profits of the disputed property as alleged by them. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs contends that the Courts below have omitted to give due weight to the contents of one of the permanent leases obtained by Debi Dat in his name and to the entries made in the khasra for 1315 F. In the former there is a reference to the old tenancy having existed; but that reference does not necessarily imply that the old tenancy was held by the entire family, or by any person other than Debi Dat. In the latter Debi Dat and Ajudhia Prasad are recorded as holding certain trees on plot No. 967 and Matabadal, Gurdat and Ajudhia are recorded as holding the trees standing on plots Nos. 1127/1 and 1127/2 khasra. The Courts below have carefully considered the above khasra and have come to the conclusion that the entries contained internal evidence of their unreliability and were not entitled to any weight. It is not open to the plaintiffs to contend in second appeal that the opinion which the Courts below have formed in regard to the value to be attached to the document was erroneous. The Courts had to consider the entries in that khasra along with the entries in the previous khasras produced in the case; and if they gave greater weight to the latter, no objection can be taken on that score. It is further argued that a separation in mess and residence did not amount to a disruption of the joint family. But the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs in this case was that there was not only separation in mess and residence, but the profits also used to be divided. A complete separation must, therefore, be deemed to have taken place long before the suit, and as was pointed out in Mendana v. Jagan Nath Bakhsh (1), the disruption being proved, it was for the plaintiffs to show that it took place within twelve years prior to the suit, or that they had been in possession within that period. The findings on these points being against the plaintiffs, there is no reason for interference with the decisions passed by the Courts below.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 24—Confession made after several conversations with Police Officers, admissibility of.

To render a confession admissible it must be made voluntarily, and not as the result of any inducement or threat. A confession made after a conversation of several days with the Investigating Officer and other Police Officers cannot be said to be a voluntary confession so as to make it admissible against the person who made it. Appeal against the conviction and sentence passed upon the accused by the Sessions Judge, Backergunge, dated the 25th November 1918.

Mr. B. M. Sen, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. K. Fazlul Haq, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—Mobarak Ali and his son Subhan Ali were placed on their trial before the Sessions Judge of Barisal on charges framed under section 302, Indian Penal Code, for having caused the death of one Azmat Ali. The Judge, agreeing with both the Assessors, convicted the accused of the offence charged and sentenced them to transportation for life. Against the conviction and sentence this appeal has been preferred by both the accused.

The case for the prosecution mainly rests on the confessions made by the accused and as the learned Judge has himself said, 'apart from these there is practically no case whatever.' We have, therefore, to consider first of all whether these confessions were voluntary or whether they were the result of any inducement or threat. The Assessors found the accused guilty and apparently they believed the confessions to be true, but they gave no indication of their opinion on the question whether the confessions were or were not voluntary.

The circumstances of the case are shortly these: the deceased was a nephew of the accused Mobarak Ali. He had lost his father at an early age and was brought up by his uncle who had got him married. They lived in the same Bari, deceased occupying the west Bhita and the accused the east Bhita. It appears that the deceased, when he came of age, claimed his father's share of the ancestral properties. There was an arbitration and the arbitrators divided the properties between the uncle and the nephew in the proportion of 10 annas and 6 annas. Mobarak agreed to the division and himself demarcated the lands but when the deceased went to plough the land that was allotted to him, Mobarak Ali is said to have opposed him. It is also alleged that the deceased complained of his uncle's conduct to the landlord and that in consequence the landlord fined Mobarak Ali's son Sobhan Rs. 25. It is also said that the day before the occurrence Mobarak Ali's cows had damaged the paddy crop of the deceased which had led to a quarrel between them. This was alleged as a possible motive for the crime in the first information lodged by the wife of the deceased on the 27th of July 1918. On the whole it may be taken as established that the uncle and the nephew were not on good terms. On the 25th of July the wife of the deceased, Rupsan Bibi, had gone on a visit to her father's house. She came back the next morning and found her husband not in the house. From what she saw on her return her suspicions were roused and she informed her father who came almost immediately, and there was a search in which the second accused Suban took part under the direction of his father. The dead body was found in a deserted Bhita a quarter of a mile from the house of the accused and close to it was a Donga boat belonging to the deceased. There was a palm-fruit in the boat. Information was lodged in the Thana by the wife of the deceased. The Police Sub-Inspector came and the dead body was sent for post mortem examination. The cause of death could not, however, be ascertained owing to the fact that the body was in an advanced stage of decomposition.

As I have said, the point for consideration is whether the confession is relevant under section 24 of the Evidence Act. The confession was made at 3 P. M. on the 30th of July 1918. It was subsequently retracted and was said to have been induced by ill-treatment of the Police. The Judge was of opinion that there was intrinsic evidence that the confession was true. I shall deal with this matter later on, but it seems to me that before considering the intrinsic evidence bearing on the truth of the confession I must answer the question whether the confession was admissible. In my opinion the confession was made under circumstances that would exclude its admissibility. It appears that the Sub-Inspector of Police came to the spot at 5 P. M. on the 27th of July and from the very beginning he suspected the first accused. It also appears that even before the Sub-Inspector came and almost immediately after the discovery of the dead body, the Chowkidar and the Dafadar had arrested the accused Mobarak Ali, or at any rate kept him under restraint. There is some conflict of evidence as to when the accused were formally arrested by the Sub-Inspector. The Sub Inspector says that he arrested the accused at 2 P. M. on the 29th of July. It is, however, clear that the accused were under the control of the Police almost immediately on the Daroga's arrival, although they might not have been under actual arrest. The Sub-Inspector admits that on the 28th he questioned the accused from 7 to 10 P. M. He also says that he told Amir Ali, Hujjat Ali, Dafadar and the Chowkidar to talk with the accused. We are not told what was the nature of the talk. As I have said, we are dealing with a retracted confession. It may be that the story of ill-treatment is false. At any rate, it has not been proved, but it is always difficult for an accused to prove ill treatment even when it is true. One would naturally ask why was the Sub Inspector questioning the accused for 3 hours, if not for the purpose of getting a confessional statement. Why did he ask the Dafadar, Chowkidar and two others to talk to the accused ? Talk on what subject if not of the murder? The accused Mobarak Ali and his son had been both from the very beginning pretending, (if they were the murderers) that they knew nothing about the murder. What happened between the evening of the 26th and the afternoon of the 30th July which influenced the accused to throw off the mask and make a clean breast of their sins before the Magistrate? To my mind, it can only be accounted for by the influence of the Police exercised over them during the time the accused were under their control. I cannot think that it was a sudden attack of penitence, nor can it be said that accused were confronted with any very damaging evidence and thought that it was useless any longer to insist on their innocence. Except on the hypothesis that the confession was due to inducement or threat on the part of the Police the conduct of the accused seems to be inexplicable. The learned Judge was very much impressed by the incident of the palm-fruit. Subhan said that as they were carrying the dead body in the boat a palm-fruit fell from a tree in Naimuddin's homestead and his father asked him to pick it up. He asked his father for an explanation and was rebuked for his curiosity. Mobarak Ali states in his confession that he put the palm-fruit in the Donga so that it might create the impression that the deceased had gone to steal palm fruits and was killed by a ghost. I do not think this circumstance carries any great weight. The fruit was found in the boat and its presence had to be accounted for. It is not a thing that came out incidentally in the course of the narration. If the story told in the confession was a got up story, those who are responsible for it must have felt the necessity of getting the explanation both from the father and the son and we have the explanation in the confession of both. I am not, therefore, impressed by the Judge's argument on the intrinsic evidence furnished by the confession itself. If the confession is put aside, as I have said, there is little else to go upon. All we have is the evidence of a quarrel between the uncle and the nephew, but that to my mind is not sufficient to account for the murder of a nephew by an uncle who had himself brought him up from his infancy. In addition to this evidence of motive we have only the evidence of Meherjan that on the 25th of July about midnight, i. e., about the time when according to the confession the murder was committed, she saw two men going from south to north. It was a moonlight night and she could recognise Mobarak Ali and Subhan Ali. In cross-examination she said: "there were some jute plants between her and the accused and they were taller than herself." In re-examination she explained that she saw the accused after they had passed the jute plants. Between her Bari and the Bari of the accused a khal intervenes. From the earliest moment suspicion had attached to the two accused. She saw them going together at an unusual hour of the night in which the murder had taken place and yet she did not mention the incident to her husband until Monday the 29th, i. e., 4 days after. This is suspicious. It also seems to me that the possibility of death by snake bite or any other cause of like nature has not been excluded. The discovery of the Piri with which the murder is said to have been committed carries no weight. Piris are to be found almost in every cultivator's house

For all these reasons I think it would be unsafe to convict the accused upon evidence such as we have before us. I would, therefore, acquit them.

RICHARDSON, J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my learned brother in this case and concur in the conclusion at which he has arrived.

The case turns on the confessions of the two accused. It may be that this is not a case in which the Sessions Judge would have been justified in ruling as matter of law only that the confessions were inadmissible on the ground that they were not voluntary. But if the case had been tried by a Jury, the Jury should certainly have been instructed that if they came to the conclusion on the evidence that the confessions were in fact not voluntary confessions, they should be discarded. When inquisitorial methods are employed, as they seem to have been in the present case, the question will arise whether the confession which follows has not been obtained by inducement or threat or other improper means. The employment of such methods has often been condemned.

Moreover, the confessions here were retracted and the only corroboration which they receive is from the doubtful evidence of Meherjan Bibi.

I agree that the conviction and the sentences should be set aside.

Conviction and sentence set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 203, 437—Complaint against several accused—Magistrate refusing to proceed against some—Order, whether amounts to discharge—Further enquiry, order for—Notice to accused, whether necessary.

One S. instituted a criminal case against eleven persons. The Magistrate instituted proceedings only against some of them and after their conviction rejected the petition of the complainant to issue process against the remainder. On application by the complainant the District Magistrate under section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code ordered the remaining accused to be proceeded against. No notice was issued to the accused prior to the passing of the order:

Held, (1) that the order of the Magistrate refusing to issue process amounted to a discharge and that the District Magistrate had, therefore, jurisdiction to proceed under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code; [p. 932, col. 2.]

Ajab Lal Khirher v Emperor, 32 C. 783; 9 C. W. N. 810; 2 Cr. L. J. 524, followed.

(2) that no notice was required to be issued to the accused inasmuch as they had never appeared before a Magistrate nor been formally discharged. [p. 932, col. 2]

Before an order is made under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code, it is not necessary that notice should in all cases be served upon the accused. Notice is necessary only in those cases where the accused have already appeared and have been discharged. In cases where the accused have not appeared before the Magistrate and taken their trial, no such notice is necessary. [p. 932, col. 2.]

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Gour Chandra Pal, for the Petitioners.—It is a general principle of Criminal Law that no order to the prejudice of an accused person should be made behind his back. This is observed in practice every day by the High Court, and there is all the more reason that the Subordinate Courts should follow this sound principle: Ambar Ali v. Anjab Ali (1), Girdhari Marwari v. Emperor (2).

(1) 14 Ind. Cas. 768; 39 C. 238; 13 Cr. L. J. 204.

HARI LAL CHOUDHRY v. EMPEROR.

The order of the Magistrate does not amount to a discharge and, therefore, the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to direct a further enquiry. It is not a case of "any complaint which has been dismissed," nor is it the "case of any accused person who has been discharged," inasmuch as the accused never appeared, were never charged and, therefore, could not be said to have been discharged.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.—The District Magistrate had jurisdiction to order further enquiry; the order of the Magistrate refusing to issue process amounts to a discharge. This is now well settled. Ajab Lal Khirher v Emperor (3).

[IMAM, J.– You need not pursue this point further. I want to hear you on the question of want of notice.]

Issue of notice is discretionary ; the law nowhere provides for it. In fact the section is silent on the point. The true test is: "Have the accused been prejudiced for want of service of notice?" The rulings draw a distinction between cases where the accused have appeared at any stage of the case and have been discharged, and cases where they have never appeared. The Full Bench case of Hari Dass Sanyal v. Saritulla (4) draws this distinction. Girish Chunder Ghose v. Emperor (5).

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are shortly these. One Sheonandan Singh instituted a criminal case against eleven persons, including the petitioners. Out of these eleven some were tried and convicted. After their conviction the private prosecutor happened to die and one Jugrup Singh, his uncle, applied to the Sub-Divisional Officer of Hajipur for summoning the petitioners to take their trial The Sub Divisional Officer rejected this petition, on the ground that the case had been adequately dealt with by the first trial. Thereupon Jugrup Singh moved the District Magistrate of Mozafferpur, who ordered the petitioners to be proceeded against.

The learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the petitioners has taken two points on which he asks me to hold that the order of the District Magistrate of Muzafferpur is ultra vires

(3) 32 C. 783: 9 C. W. N 810; 2 Cr. L. J. 524.

(4) 15 C. 608 (F. B.); 13 Ind. Jur. 55; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 989.

(5) 29 C. 457; 6 C. W. N. 638.

The first contention is that there should have been notice served upon his clients before an order under section 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure could have been passed. Reliance for this contention is placed upon Ambar Ali v. Anjab Ali (1) and Girdhari Marwari v. Emperor (2). On the authority of these rulings it is contended that the order without notice is bad. The learned Assistant Government Advocate appearing on the other side has drawn my attention to Girish Chunder Ghose v. Emperor (5) and Hari Dass Sanyall v. Saritula (4). His contention is that notice in all cases under section 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not necessary. He argues that such notice is necessary only in those cases where the accused have already appeared and have been discharged. In cases where the accused have not appeared before the Magistrate and taken their trial, he contends, no such notice is necessary. I agree in the contention raised by the Assistant Government Advocate. The authorities he has cited clearly draw a distinction between the cases covered by Ambar Ali v. Anjab Ali (1) and Girdhari Marwari v. Emperor (2), above referred to, and the case before me. On the facts of this case it is quite evident the petitioners, as a matter of fact, never had appeared before any Magistrate and, therefore, the authorities relied upon by the Assistant Government Advocate apply to the present case.

The second point on the question of jurisdiction raised on behalf of the petitioners is that the District Magistrate of Muzafferpore had no jurisdiction at all to direct a further enquiry into this case. There is no substance in this contention. The point is concluded by the authority of Ajab Lal Khirher v. Emperor (3). The order of the Sub-Divisional Officer in this case refusing to try the petitioners amounts to a discharge and the jurisdiction of the District Magistrate under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code, remains.

In the circumstances the application is rejected.

Application rejected.

CRIMINAL APPEALS NOS. 119 TO 135 OF 1919.

June 26, 1919.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR—APPELLANT

J. B. H. JOHNSON—ACCUSED—RESPONDENT.

Factories Act (XII of 1911), s. 41 (a)—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 71—Employing several persons to work in contravention of provisions of Act—Offences, whether separate.

The language of section 41 (a) of the Factories Act indicates that what is prohibited is the employment of any person or allowing any person to work contrary to the provisions of the Act, that is to say, it is an offence to employ any person, or allow him to work, contrary to the provisions of the Act. Therefore, where several persons are so employed, the offence is complete and separate in respect of each person employed or allowed to work contrary to any of the provisions of the Act [p. 933, col. 2; p. 934, col. 1; p 935, col. 1.]

To such a case the provisions of section 71 of the Penal Code have no application, because the offence of each workman is distinct and separate and there is not one offence collectively merely by the fact of a number of these offences having been committed at the same time. [p. 934, col. 2; p. 935, col. 2.]

Criminal appeal by the Government of Bombay from the orders of acquittal, passed by the Sessions Judge, Ahmedabad, reversing convictions and sentences passed by the Sub Divisional Magistrate, Ahmedabad.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

Sir Chimanlal Setalvad for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The facts which have given rise to these appeals are few and undisputed.

On the 4th of September last at about 11-30 P. M. eighteen persons were found working in the Calico Mills, which is a textile factory subject to the provisions of the Indian Factories Act, XII of 1911. Eighteen complaints were lodged in respect of the employment of these eighteen persons against the manager of the said factory. The accused pleaded guilty, and he was convicted in all these eighteen cases and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 100 in each case. On appeals to the Sessions Court the learned Sessions Judge upheld the conviction in the first of these cases and set aside the convictions and sentences in the remaining seventeen cases. He was of opinion that the offence was one of employment of labour collectively and that it was not a separate offence to employ each person contrary to the provisions of the Act.

It is in these seventeen cases, in which the accused has been acquitted by the Sessions Court, that the present appeals are preferred by the Government of Bombay. The question of law that arises is whether under section 41 (a) of the Act the offence consists of the employment of labour apart from the number of men employed or whether the offence is complete and separate in respect of each person employed or allowed to work contrary to any of the provisions of the Act.

It has been argued on behalf of the Crown that under section 29 of the Act no person can be employed in any textile factory after 7 o'clock in the evening, that under section 41 (a) if in any factory any person is employed or allowed to work contrary to the provisions of the Act, the manager is liable to fine which may extend to Rs. 200, and that the offence is distinct in respect of every person employed or allowed to work contrary to the provisions of the Act. It is further contended that neither the terms of section 45 of the Act nor the corresponding provisions of the English Statute (1 Edw. VII, c. 22, section 135) support the conclusion at which the lower Appellate Court has arrived.

On behalf of the accused it has been urged that the general scheme of the Act, including the provisions relating to the textile factories, indicates that the prohibition is not in respect of any individual but in respect of the labour collectively, and that, therefore, an offence under section 41, clause (a), is not the offence of employing each individual but the offence of employing one or more workmen at a time. It is also urged that section 45 of the Act lends support to that view. It is further argued that in any case the provisions of section 71 of the Indian Penal Code are applicable to this case and that there should be only one punishment in respect of all these offences, even if the act of employing each of these persons is treated as a separate act.

After a consideration of these arguments I am clearly of opinion that the contention urged on behalf of the Crown must be allowed. The words of section 41 (a) are clear and indicate, in my opinion, that what is prohibited is the employment of any person or allowing any person to work contrary to any of the provisions of the Act. That would mean that it is an offence under section 41 (a) to employ any person or to allow him to work contrary to the provisions of the Act. In the present case, there is no doubt that all these eighteen persons were employed contrary to the provisions of section 29, sub-section 1. It is not suggested that any of the exceptions contained in sub-section (2) of section 29 or in section 30 of the Act are applicable to the facts of the present case. The accused has pleaded guilty to the charges, and there is no doubt that the employment of each one of these seventeen persons was contrary to the provisions of section 29, sub-section 1. The employment of each person must be treated as a distinct act, and the fact that eighteen persons were employed at one time cannot make the employment of these persons one act of employment. The argument based on the scheme of the Act seems to me to be open to the objection that it ignores the clear phraseology of sections 29 and 41, clause (a), and that it involves the assumption that the object of the Act is to regulate the working of the mills and the employment of labour collectively and not necessarily to secure protection for the workmen employed in the factory individually. There is no justification for such an assumption. On the other hand, it is a fair view to take that these provisions are intended, among other things, to protect the persons employed in the factory and that the result can be effectively secured if they are read as applying individually and not collectively. As regards section 45 of the Act, I think that it has no application to the present case, and that it throws no light on the point under consideration. It applies in terms to a repetition of the same kind of offence from day to day and not to offences of the same description on the same day. The words of clause (b) of section 45 must be read with reference to the purpose of the section, and cannot be allowed to control the plain meaning of section 41, clause (a). It is significant that in clause (b) in the corresponding section 143 of the English Statute the same phraseology is used, even though under section 137 of that Act the penalty is provided for each person employed.

The provisions of section 71 of the Indian Penal Code, in my opinion, have no application to this case. If the offence consists of employing the labour collectively after the prescribed hour, no resort to section 71 is necessary. If it is an offence to employ each workman, section 71 cannot apply. The first paragraph of the section applies to a case where a repetition of the same offence constitutes in the result the same offence. This is indicated by illustration (a). In the present case the offence, if it consists of employing each workman, is distinct and separate and there is no one offence collectively merely by the fact of a number of these offences having been committed at the same time.

The ground upon which the learned Sessions Judge has based his conclusion is that under the repealed Indian Factories Act of 1881, there was an express provision that the offence would be in respect of each individual employed. That, no doubt, was expressly provided as an exception to a proviso which existed in the Act of 1891 and also in the amended section in the Act of 1891. But in the new Act the proviso including the exception is omitted. I do not think that the omission suggests the inference which the lower Appellate Court has drawn. It was apparently to modify the plain meaning of the words of the principal part of the section that the proviso was inserted and even then an exception was made as regards the offence of employing each person. In my opinion the omission to re-enact the proviso rendered the exception unnecessary. Thus the omission has the effect of leaving the words used in the section to indicate their plain and natural meaning. that it would be an offence to employ any person contrary to the provisions of the Act. I cannot agree with the learned Sessions Judge in his suggestion that all the offences indicated in other clauses of section 41 are single offences. I am unable to read all the other clauses of the section in that sense. For instance, it is difficult to accept, as has been suggested in the course of the argument before us, that under clause (e) of section 41, which makes it an offence to construct any door in contravention of section 15, it would be only one offence whether one door is constructed in contravention of section 15 or several doors are so constructed. I do not, however, desire to pursue this line of argument, nor to express any definite opinion as to the interpretation of any other clause of section 41, as that is not strictly necessary for the purpose of this case. I am content to take the words used in clause (a) with which we are concerned in this case and to interpret them in their natural and plain sense.

I have no doubt, therefore, that the convictions in these seventeen cases recorded by the Trial Magistrate were right and that the acquittals are wrong.

The result is that the orders of the lower Appellate Court in these seventeen appeals are set aside and the convictions recorded by the Trial Magistrate restored.

As regards the sentences, while it is right that the total fine in respect of these several offences should be substantial, it should not be excessive. The record does not disclose all the circumstances connected with the employment of eighteen persons on this particular occasion. On the whole we think that the sentence of Rs. 50 in each of these seventeen cases would be sufficient to meet the ends of justice. We accordingly order that the accused be sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50 in each of these seventeen cases and in default of payment to undergo simple imprisonment for fifteen days.

HAYWARD, J.—These appeals raise the question whether the manager of a factory commits one or several offences by employing several persons illegally under section 41 (a) of the Indian Factories Act, XII of 1911.

It seems to me that he commits several offences according to the plain meaning of the words used. But it has been argued that a different meaning ought to be implied and that regard ought to be had not to the number of persons employed, but only generally to the employment. The argument is based on reasoning put forward, not without hesitation, by the learned Sessions Judge, who relied upon the provisions of section 15 of the old Act of 1881 as amended by Act XI of 1891 and upon the provisions of section 45 of the present Act XII of 1911.

It seems to me, however, that the commission of several offences by the employment of several persons was also the plain meaning of the similar words used in the old Act of 1881 as amended by the Act of 1891. There was no necessity otherwise for the proviso restricting the plain meaning, except in the particular instance of the employment of two or more persons, to several offences committed on different days. The effect of the exception was merely to limit the proviso and, therefore, could not be affected by the repeal of the proviso. The necessity of the exception ceased with the repeal of the proviso. It could not, therefore, be implied that the plain meaning of the words was not intended by reason of the omission of the proviso of the old Act from section 41 of the present Act of 1911.

It seems to me again that the commission of several offences on a particular day would nonetheless render the offender liable to separate punishments, because a repetition of those offences on succeeding days has specially been stated to involve liability for further punishments by the subsequent section 45 of the present Act of 1911. It is no doubt difficult to explain why this particular provision was limited to the employment of two or more persons. But whether this was merely a slip in drafting, as would appear to me probable, or whether it was intentional, would make no difference, because the repetition of offences on subsequent days has alone been in view in section 45 of the present Act of 1911.

It was also argued that more than one punishment could not be inflicted for the several offences by reason of the provisions of section 71 of the Indian Penal Code. But it seems to me that that argument merely begged the question. Those provisions could only apply if there were not several offences in the employment of several persons, but merely the general offence of employment. They would not restrict the infliction of punishment in respect of the employment of several persons if this involved several independent offences, but would only restrict the punishment if they involved merely the general offence of employment. It seems to me that recourse could not be had to section 71 of the Indian Penal Code.

It seems to me lastly that substantial punishments were necessary in view of what has been stated both by the Magistrate and the learned Sessions Judge. The punishment proposed, which would approximate in the aggregate to a fine of Rs. 1,000, should be a sufficient punishment for infliction by this Court.

Orders set aside.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 297 OF 1919.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145, proceedings under—Previous decree or order of Civil Court for possession, value of—Magistrate, duty of—Possession—Jurisdiction.

A previous order of a Civil Court relating to the property in dispute in a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code might throw light upon the matter, but the evidentiary value to be attached to such a piece of evidence must depend upon the particular circumstances of each individual case. [p. 937, col. 2.]

There is no inflexible rule of law that in a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate is concluded by every previous order of a Civil or Criminal Court: each case must depend upon its particular circumstances [p 938, col. 1]

Per Huda, J.—Decrees of Courts, so far as third parties are concerned, may have different values in different cases. [p 938, cols. 1 & 2.]

In a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate cannot be said to have acted without jurisdiction simply because in making the order he went behind a decree or order of the Civil Court. [p. 938, col. 2.]

Rule against the order of the Deputy Magistrate, with 1st Class powers, Bankura, dated the 19th February 1919.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—Atul Chandra Mandal, the petitioner, is the first party in a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, which ended in an order in favour of the second party, Srinath Laik and Kamalakhi Dasi.

The petitioner's case is that the land which formed the subject of the proceeding was held by his father under one Mohendra Chakravarty and that his father let it out to some Lohars in 1302 B. S.; that the latter failed to pay the rent, and the petitioner obtained a rent decree against them, caused the property to be sold in execution, bought it himself on June 13th, 1918, and took possession through Court on August 5th, 1918.

The case for the second party is this, that one Sujay Chandra Das was in possession of the village in which the land is situated, that he let the land in dispute to one Sarbeswar Mandal in 1912, that Sarbeswar let it to some Lohars, but bought it himself in 1915 in execution of a rent decree against them, that in 1324 B. S. Sarbeswar sold his rights to Kamalakhi Dasi wife of Sujay Chandra Das and that she let the land to Srinath Laik on May 2nd, 1918.

It is common ground, therefore, that some Lohars were in possession until recently and that Srinath was not in actual possession until May 1918, and Atul not until August 1918.

The trouble arose a few days after the delivery of possession to Atul on August 5th, 1918, but the proceedings were drawn up on December 12th, 1918, and the question which the Magistrate had to decide was which of the two parties was in possession on that date.

The grounds taken on behalf of the petitioner are three :—

(1) that the learned Magistrate has gone into ancient history, instead of confining his attention to the one question of which party was in possession on December 12th, 1918;

(2) that as one party said the land was in village Parulia while the other said it was in village Chaoari, an adjudication on that point was necessary to a decision of the case; and

(3) that the learned Magistrate ought to have held himself bound to uphold the order of the Civil Court putting Atul Chandra Mandal in possession.

The first ground needs very few words. It is clear that the learned Magistrate appreciated that the question was who was in possession on December 12th, 1918, but to answer that question he had to examine the stories told by both sides.

As to the second ground, there is no dispute regarding the identity of the land: whether it is within the boundaries of one village or another makes no difference as to actual possession, although it would have an important bearing on title.

The third ground, however, is the one that has been pressed most strenuously and it is, no doubt, on this ground that the Rule was issued. The decree to which reference is made was a rent decree obtained by Atul Chandra Mandal against some Lohars: in execution of that decree the holding was put up to sale and bought by Atul on June 13th, 1918: possession was given to him by the Civil Court on August 5th, 1918. With regard to that decree it is to be noted that the defendants were not the Lohars mentioned by the second party, and that neither Srinath Laik nor Kamalakhi Dasi—the members of the second party—nor any of the Lohars mentioned by them were parties to the decree and that the decree was obtained ex parte. There has, therefore, been no adjudication by a competent Court between the parties now litigating. It is urged that this fact is of no consequence and that the second party should have been left to seek redress under Order XXI, rule 100. It is quite true that that provision gives a remedy to one who has been dispossessed, but their case is that they were not, in fact, dispossessed, and that appears to be the finding of the learned Magistrate although it is not very clearly expressed. Numerous authorities have been quoted before us on the question of the weight to be attached in proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, to a decree of the Civil Court regarding the property in dispute, but I do not think it necessary to refer to them in detail, for they have been discussed at some length in the case of Kulada Kinkar Roy v Danesh Mir (1). It was there held that a previous order of the Civil Court relating to the property in dispute might throw light upon the matter, but the evidentiary value to be attached to such a piece of evidence must depend upon the particular circumstances of the individual case. This, I think, is the view that has been taken by the learned Magistrate, for he points out several facts about that rent suit, all tending to the conclusion that it was not a bona fide suit by a landlord against tenants in actual possession.

In my judgment the learned Magistrate has not committed any error in his treatment of the proceedings in the Civil Court. As the grounds taken by the petitioner fail, the Rule must be discharged.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—The petitioner purchased the land covered by the proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, in execution of a rent decree and obtained symbolical possession. The sale took place on the 13th of June, possession was delivered on the 5th of August and the present proceedings were taken on the 13th of August 1918. The Magistrate has put the opposite party in possession of some of the lands purchased by the petitioner, finding that this land was never in possession of the tenants whose holding was sold, that it did not form a part of any such holding and that on the date of the proceedings it was the opposite party that was in actual possession inspite of the execution of the writ for delivery of possession.

In support of the Rule Mr. Sarbadhikari has contended that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to go behind the Civil Court decree and he has relied on a number of rulings which support his contention more or less, and decisions taking a contrary view have also been placed before us by the learned Vakil who appeared to show cause against the Rule. These decisions are not wholly reconcilable.

In the case of Doulat Koer v. Rameswari Koeri (2) it appears that Doulat Koer had obtained Letters of Administration to the estate of her husband after a protracted litigation which went up to the Privy Council. The opposite party Dulin Saheba claimed possession by right of purchase from one Mahadeb, in whose favour Doulat Koer was said to have created a Dur mukarari interest pending the suit for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the appeal to the Privy Council. During the pendency of the suit the property was in the possession of a Receiver, and it appeared that when the Receiver vacated, possession was made over to Doulat Koer. Prinsep, J., held that the Magistrate acted without jurisdiction in putting Dulin Saheba in possession. He observed: "It is not for the Magistrate in this summary proceeding to consider whether as against Doulat Koer this confers a perpetual title to possession. The duty of the Magistrate was to carry out the orders of the Civil Court and to maintain those orders by assisting the possession of any person whose title is found by that Court." In Gordon Sims v. Joburry Lal (3) Sale and Pratt, JJ, following the decision in Doulat Koer's case (2), said: "We are aware of no rulings which prescribe that the Magistrate is to maintain a party in possession in accordance with a decree of Civil Court only when the opposite party is a party to that decree." In the case of Gulraj Marwari v. Sheik Bhatoo (4) a Civil Court decree was held binding even against third parties. The tendency of later decisions has, however, been not to consider a Civil Court decree binding against third parties even for purposes of proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. To this class belong the cases of Bloomfield v. Gangadhar Kundu (5) and Jogabandhu Shaha v. Raj Kumar Roy Chowdhury (6). Between these two views we may safely adopt a middle course, and I feel no hesitation in following the decision of Rampini and Mookerjee, JJ., in Kulada Kinkar Roy v. Danesh Mir (1) in which it was observed that there is no inflexible rule of law that a Magistrate is concluded by every previous order of a Civil or Criminal Court and that every case must depend on its own particular circumstances.

Decrees of Courts, so far as third parties are concerned, may have different values in different cases. Where, for instance, there has been a real contest between the parties to a suit and upon an adjudication regarding title or possession a party has been awarded a decree and has been put in possession in execution of such a decree, it may not be enough for a party claiming adversely to such a decree to show that he was not a party to it.

Cases of money decrees followed by sale of properties would stand on a different footing. In these cases the sale in execution only passes the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor. Consequently, there is no adjudication regarding his title to the property, except where an attachment gives rise to a claim and there is an adjudication on such claim or where the delivery of possession leads to an investigation under Order XXI, rules 97 to 100 of the Civil Procedure Code.

In estimating the value of delivery of possession against third parties it is also material to see what is the true nature of the possession said to have been delivered.

In the present case there was a suit for rent, there was no contest and there was an ex parte decree. There was no adjudication of any kind regarding the title and possession of the tenants whose holding was brought to sale and all that was done in delivering possession was the posting of a bamboo, and it does not appear that the second party were present when the bamboo was posted or had any opportunity of offering resistance to such delivery of possession. The Magistrate who tried the case was also not satisfied that the proceedings in the rent suit were bona fide.

Under these circumstances I do not think the Magistrate went beyond his jurisdiction in disregarding the decree of the Civil Court and I agree with my learned brother in discharging the Rule.

Rule discharged.

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Shahabad, dated the 10th February 1919, directing further inquiry into the case of a complaint dismissed by the Sub-Divisional Officer, Buxar.

The case was originally heard by Jwala Prasad, J., sitting singly who in view of the importance of the matter involved in this case referred it to the Bench.

FACTS will appear from the following judgment of

JWALA PRASAD, J.—(March 21, 1919).—This is an application against an order of the Sessions Judge of Shahabad, dated the 10th February 1919, under section 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure directing further enquiry into a complaint which was dismissed by the Sub-Divisional Officer of Buxar under section 203 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The complaint was lodged in respect of offences under sections 395, 379 and 147, Indian Penal Code, on the 10th of January 1919 and the complainant was examined on oath the same day. The Magistrate, without giving any reason for postponing the issue of processes, passed the following order on the back of the petition :—"Inspector Dumraon to treat this as a first information and make careful enquiry reporting by 18th January 1919."

On 17th January the Inspector submitted his report for judicial enquiry for an offence under section 323, Indian Penal Code. On receipt of this report the Magistrate on 18th January 1919 dismissed the complaint under section 203, Criminal Procedure Code.

The order of the Magistrate dismissing the complaint has, however, been set aside by the learned Sessions Judge of Shahabad and further enquiry into the complaint under section 437 of the Code has been directed.

Mr. Manuk on behalf of the petitioners attacks the order of the Sessions Judge on various grounds, the principal one being that no notice was given to the petitioners by the Sessions Judge before directing further enquiry under section 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is not necessary for me to mention, or deal with, the other grounds taken by Mr. Manuk on behalf of the petitioners, inasmuch as I consider it desirable that the principal question, whether the order of the Sessions Judge under section 437 should be set aside as being bad for want of notice to the petitioners, should be decided by a larger Bench. Section 437 itself does not provide for any notice being given to any person affected by an order under that section. Mr. Manuk, however, invokes the aid of the general principle of law that no order should be passed against any person without notice to him and without giving him an opportunity of being heard against the proposed order. In support of this contention a number of authorities of the various High Courts, notably of the Calcutta High Court, has been cited to me. It is needless to refer to all of them, as they have been enumerated in almost all the annotated editions of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The leading decision is that of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the matter of Hari Dass Sanyal v. Saritulla (1). That was a case where the accused person was discharged under section 253 of the Code. It is, however, observed in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice and Prinsep, J., that no notice would be necessary in case of a complaint dismissed under section 203 where the accused person had not appeared or was not summoned to appear before the Magistrate—a distinction is made between a discharge of an accused under section 253 and a dismissal of a complaint under section 203. Mr. Yunus appearing for the opposite party relies upon this distinction and contends that no notice at all was necessary, inasmuch as the learned Sessions Judge in directing further enquiry under section 437 was making the same order as the Magistrate would have made upon the complaint, namely, directing processes to issue against the accused behind their back and without a notice to them. Mr. Yunus further relies upon the case of Girish Chunder Ghose v. Emperor (2) and the view taken by the Allahabad High Court in several cases, particularly in Angan v. Ram Pirbhan (3) and Liaqat Husain v Emperor (4). A contrary view appears to have been taken in 1906 by the Calcutta High Court in the cases of Brij Kishore Ghose v. Gopal Rai (5) and Bhagwat Prasad Singh v. Bishuni Darzi (6). In the latter case the report of the case is too short to give us a detailed account of the facts of that case, but the following observation appears in the body of the judgment :—"It is a rule which has been consistently followed in this Court that notice should be served unless the case is a very clear one." Mr. Manuk relies upon this observation for his contention that in the case of dismissal of a complaint under section 203 also the practice of the Calcutta High Court had been to require a notice to be given to the accused before directing further enquiry into the complaint under section 437 of the Code.

In view, however, of a different opinion expressed by the Calcutta High Court in the Full Bench case of Hari Dass Sanyal v. Saritulla (1) and the positive decision in the case of Girish Chunder Ghose v. Emperor (2) it is impossible to say that the invariable rule of practice of that Court was to require a notice to be given before directing further enquiry under section 437.

My attention has been drawn to a judgment of Mr. Justice Imam, sitting singly, in an unreported case of Hari Lal Chowdhry v. Emperor (7). In that case on a complaint some of the accused persons mentioned in the petition were tried and convicted. The Magistrate refused to issue summons against the remaining persons accused in the complaint petition. On motion to the Sessions Judge the order of the Magistrate was set aside and further enquiry was directed under section 437 of the Code. This order was passed without any notice to the persons affected by the order. Mr. Justice Imam adopted the view of the Calcutta High Court in Girish Chunder Ghose v. Emperor (2) and the principle enunciated in the judgment of Mr. Justice Prinsep in Hari Dass Sanyal v. Saritulla (1), and held that where the accused persons had not entered appearance in the Court of the Magistrate no notice was necessary.

I have already said that section 437 itself does not expressly provide for a notice to be given to the person affected by the order under that section. The decision of this case, therefore, involves laying down an important rule of procedure to be followed by the lower Courts in this Province in dealing under section 437 of the Code with complaints dismissed under section 203. In view of the fact that cases of this kind very frequently occur, I feel it desirable that the question be set at rest by a definite and authoritative decision on the point of a larger Bench of this High Court. Let the case be placed before a proper Bench for decision as early as possible.

Mr. P. C. Manuk (with him Mr. Nirsu Narayan Sinha), for the Petitioners:—(1) Notice should be issued "unless the case is very clear," Quotes 11 C. W. N. 35, notes portion. Calcutta practice is not consistently against me, only Girish Chunder Ghose v. Emperor (2) is against me.

In Bombay, notice was given in Queen-Empress v. Gajankhan (8), where the accused was an Honorary Magistrate. In the present case the accused was also a respectable person; reads Ruxmani Bhogilal, In re (9).

(7) 53 Ind. Cas. 931.
(8) 2 Bom. L. R. 586.
(9) 6 Bom. L. R. 479.

In Madras, Beauchamp v. Moore (10) distinguishes illegal from improper order of discharge.

Allahabad is against me altogether. I submit that the rule should be left elastic and the hands of the High Court should not be tied down where there has been injustice to the accused.

In the Punjab, opinion is divided: reads Paras Ram v. Emperor (11).

How can it prejudice or affect justice by hearing me or accused except in spec al cases, when notice to the accused would give him an opportunity to run away or abscond?

If the Sessions Judge can interfere with an order dismissing a complaint under section 203 without notice to me, where is the good of section 203?

Discretion should not be arbitrary or it would be intolerable. It is to guard against a misuse of such discretion that it is desirable that accused should be present at this further proceeding under section 437 which may result in his prejudice.

Mr. M. Yunus (with him Mr. S. P. Varma), for the Opposite Party, was not allowed to argue inasmuch as he represented the private prosecution and the Crown was not represented in this case.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners in this case are aggrieved, firstly, by an order of the Sessions Judge directing a further judicial enquiry, upon which the District Magistrate directed a specified Deputy Magistrate to hold that judicial enquiry; and secondly, by the further proceedings in which the Deputy Magistrate ignored both the orders of the Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate and summoned the accused to answer charges which everybody who had looked into the matter at all had declared either to be largely exaggerated or wholly false as regards a number of the accused who have been summoned.

Two grounds are taken, firstly, that the order passed by the Sessions Judge was without notice to the accused and, secondly, that the Deputy Magistrate had no jurisdiction to issue summonses until a judicial enquiry had been made. The whole case-law with regard to notice has been clearly and fully stated by our brother Jwala Prasad. It is sufficient for us to say that the view taken by the Full Bench in Calcutta in the case of Hari Dass Sanyal v. Saritulla (1) was that in the case of a dismissal under section 203 or section 204 (3) notice to the other side is not desirable. The other side has never yet had notice, the proceedings not having reached the stage of summoning them as accused persons and in this regard such cases are distinguishable from cases in which accused persons have been tried and discharged. Action in contravention of that Full Bench decision should not, we respectfully think, have been taken without further reference to a Full Bench. We see no reason to refer this matter to a Full Bench of this Court, for the reason that we accept the argument suggested by the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court. It seems to us illogical that an accused should not be allowed to appear in proceedings under section 202 (and this is the settled practice of this Court frequently and forcefully laid down) but that he should be allowed to appear in proceedings purporting to revise proceedings under section 202 and that if under that section the proceedings are continued, he should again be precluded from appearing. It seems to us far better that until the accused has been brought before the Court either by summons or by warrant, he should not be allowed to come before the Court at all. The view taken in Sat Narain Tewari v. Emperor (12) that a party who is not being tried for an offence is not an accused person is clearly the correct view.

As regards the merits of the learned Sessions Judge's original order we feel that it, as framed by him and interpreted by the District Magistrate, was a sound order. The Police had desired a further investigation and the complainant had prayed for a further investigation. We can see no objection to the form of the orders made by the heads of the district. We regard the proceedings of the Deputy Magistrate, Mr. Kaviraj, as a defiance of the orders of his official superiors. He should not have issued these summonses until he had made a judicial enquiry, and we are of opinion that in the circumstances of the case the issue of the summonses against all the accused was outside his powers. We, therefore, cancel the order instituting proceedings against the accused named by Mr. Kaviraj and direct that no summons or warrant be issued until a judicial enquiry has been made and a prima facie case disclosed against them.

JUDGMENT.

HUDA, J.—This is a Rule calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the order of the Sessions Judge of Backergunj, dated the 29th of October 1918, declaring that the order made by the trial Court under section 522, Criminal Procedure Code, should be treated as void, should not be set aside on the 7th and 8th grounds mentioned in the petition or why such other order should not be made in the matter as may seem fit.

The circumstances of the case leading up to the order under consideration are shortly these. In execution of a rent decree against Atabaddi Howladar, Akram Ali Howladar, and several others, Howla Mohamad Ghazi was sold and purchased by Annada Charan Singh and his cousin Chandi Charan Singh on the 29th of November 1915. Ali Asrab, opposite party No. 1, is the son of Atabaddi, since deceased. The complainant Majid Ali Sarkar is a servant of Annada Singh. The homestead of Atabaddi Howladar and Akram Ali Howladar was included in the Howla. The purchasers seem to have met with considerable opposition in Court from the judgment-debtors but afterwards succeeded in obtaining an order for delivery of possession from the Munsif. Apprehending that the proceedings for delivery of possession might lead to a breach of the peace, the Munsif ordered on the 13th of October 1917 that the writ for delivery of possession should be executed with the aid of a Police force. Thereupon on the 5th of November 1917 the Civil Court peon went to the spot with the writ for delivery of possession. A force of six armed Constables under one Havildar and one Subadar was deputed to help him. What the peon did there may be gathered from his report, dated the 6th of November 1917, submitted to the Court. In this report the peon stated that he went to the spot with the assistance of the Police, published the parwannah and put the purchasers into possession in the usual way by beat of drum. There are no grounds for questioning the correctness of this report and the Court below does not say that the peon did not do what he stated in the report that he had done.

The divergence between the prosecution and defence stories may be said to begin from here. It is alleged on behalf of the prosecution that on the 5th of November 1917 the auction-purchasers obtained actual possession, that the judgment-debtors with their family and goods left the bari and removed to another bari, taking down one of the huts and agreeing to remove the others within 3 or 4 days, that on the 6th of November the auction-purchasers erected a new hut on the site of the old hut thus removed, and this hut was occupied by the guards placed in the bari by the auction-purchasers and one Constable also remained there to keep the peace, that two other huts were removed shortly after and re-built in the new bari to which the judgment debtors had removed, that on the 10th of November 1917 Atabaddi Howladar and Akram Ali Howladar with their sons Asrab Ali and Ali Akbar and a number of others forcibly entered the bari armed with lathis and spears and threatened to beat the auction-purchasers' men unless they left the bari, that they re entered the old huts which still stood in the bari, that information was lodged at the Thana and the Sub-Inspector took up the investigation of the case on the 25th of November 1917 and arrested Atabaddi and Akram Ali, that after the Sub Inspector had left the bari the accused-opposite party with a number of men armed with lathis and sarkies attacked and wounded the men of the auction purchasers and thus regained possession of the bari. There can be no doubt that it was a most determined attack and the men of the auction purchasers were severely wounded.

The accused opposite party were on these facts charged with rioting and various other offences and in the result Ali Asrab was convicted under sections 148 and 324, Indian Penal Code, Karamat Ali was convicted under sections 147 and 323, Indian Penal Code, and they were sentenced respectively to 7 months and 5 months' rigorous imprisonment on each charge, the sentences to run concurrently; accused Islam Farazi and Azizur Rahaman were convicted under section 147, Indian Penal Code, only and sentenced to 4 months' rigorous imprisonment each. The Magistrate also passed an order under section 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code restoring Annada Singh and Chandi Singh to the possession of the bari.

On appeal the learned Sessions Judge was of opinion that on the 5th of November 1917 the auction-purchasers had not obtained actual possession, that the judgment-debtors did not leave the bari on that day as alleged by the prosecution nor did they remove any of the huts, that the story of the auction-purchasers erecting a new hut in the bari or placing their guards in it was untrue, that the defence story that they were given 5 days by way of grace to enable them to come to some arrangement with the auction-purchasers was true and that although on the expiry of the period of grace their continuance on the land was wrongful, nonetheless they remained on the land and were in possession of it on the 25th of November 1917 when the riot took place. Upon this view of the case the learned Judge held that the common object charged, viz., to take possession of the bari by force, failed and the conviction under section 148 or section 147, Indian PenalCode, could not, therefore, stand. After stating that the possession of the bari at the time of the riot was clearly wrongful and mala fide, the learned Judge proceeded as follows:—

"Nevertheless, it was possession and this is sufficient to exonerate them from the charge of rioting as framed by the lower Court. The charge under section 147 or 148, IndianPenal Code, must, therefore, fail."

He, however, affirmed the conviction of the opposite party Ali Asrab under section 324, Indian Penal Code, and of Karamat Ali under section 323, Indian Penal Code, and maintained the sentences passed upon them by the Magistrate.

"The judgment debtors," observed the learned Judge, "managed to retain possession by the device of asking for 5 days grace. It is now contended in effect that by the breach of faith the appellants acquired the right of private defence." This contention he found no difficulty in rejecting.

Regarding the order under section 522, Criminal Procedure Code, the learned Judge recorded the following order in the Order Sheet under date 21st of October 1918:—

"The order under section 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code will continue to be in abeyance pending a reference to the High Court."

On the 29th of October 1918 he recorded another order in the following terms:—

"I do not think any reference to the High Court is necessary as regards the order under section 522, Criminal Procedure Code. In view of my finding in appeal that the auction-purchasers did not get possession, the order for restoring possession to them does not arise and automatically ceases to have effect. It will, therefore, be treated as void." The Rule, as I have said, is directed against this last order.

It is stated in the petition to this Court, and the statement is supported by an affidavit, that this order was passed after hearing the Pleader for the accused but in the absence of the complainant or his Pleader or of the Public Prosecutor who had appeared for the Crown. It is clear that the complainant was most interested in the maintenance of this order and it ought not to have been declared as of no effect without hearing what the complainant had to urge in support of it On this ground alone the order is liable to be set aside. The question, however, remains whether we should set aside the order of the learned Judge, unless we are satisfied that the complainant had good grounds to urge against it if he had the opportunity to do so. I think he had. It seems to me that the mere fact that the appeal was partially allowed or the finding of the Appellate Court that the accused were in wrongful possession on the date of occurrence did not ipso facto render the order void. The judgment of Stevens and Harington, JJ., in the case of Gourhari Gope v. Alay Gopini (1) would seem to support this view, as upon any other view of the case the learned Judges would not have thought it necessary to send the case back to the Appellate Court in order that that Court should deal with the order under section 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The learned Judge could no doubt set aside the order under section 423 (d); if he thought it was just and proper to do so.

Having regard to the facts of the case and the conclusions arrived at by the Judge, it seems to me that if he had thought he had discretion in the matter he might not have exercised that discretion in favour of the opposite party. I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that the complainant's conduct disclosed a spirit of lawlessness which certainly deserved no encouragement. Here are the auction-purchasers who encounter every opposition in getting possession of the property they had purchased. At last a peon of the Civil Court with the help of an armed force gives them such possession as he could. The opposite party ask for 5 days grace to enable them to come to some settlement with the auction-purchasers. They come to no such arrangement and the five days of grace extend to twenty and when the auction purchasers' men then enter the biri in a peaceful manner unarmed, they are attacked with various deadly weapons and severe injuries are caused to the complainant and three others of his party by lathis and spears Even the Constable Jagadish Chandra did not go unhurt, for he too bore marks of slight injuries.

In a case like this to relegate the auction-purchasers to another suit in the Civil Court and possibly to a repetition of all their troubles and difficulties is a result which the Appellate Court was bound to take into consideration after hearing the party most vitally interested in the matter. It also seems to me that in coming to the conclusion that the auction purchasers did not obtain possession of the biri on the 5th of November 1917, the learned Judge put a very narrow construction on the meaning of the word 'possession'. As observed by West, J., in the case of Shaik Ibrahim v. Shaik Suleman (2), "an appropriate intention where two are present on the same premises may put the one out as well as the other into possession without any actual physical departure or formal entry." It seems to me that on that day the auction-purchasers did get possession of the bari and that its possession by the accused from that day till the 25th of November 1917 was possession by leave and license of the auction purchasers, so that it cannot be said that there was no question of restoring the auction-purchasers to possession.

I would make the Rule absolute on the short ground that the order complained of should not have been passed behind the back of the party affected by it.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

Rule made absolute.

Where the several members of a family effect a settlement of their disputes, each one relinquishing all claim in respect of all property in dispute other than that falling to his share and recognising the right of the others as they had previously asserted it to the portion allotted to them respectively, and the settlement thus effected is a bona fide settlement for the benefit of the family, and a partition of the estate follows thereupon, the Courts are bound to give full effect to it, and such settlement cannot be questioned by the reversioners by means of a suit to establish their right to some of the properties dealt with thereby.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for establishment of the plaintiffs' right to, and possession of, the properties in dispute, which are described in the four schedules to the plaint.

The plaintiffs are the daughter's sons and sole heirs of one Radha Krishna Roy. Radha Krishna left a daughter Sital Moni and the plaintiffs, grandsons, by that daughter. The defendants are the heirs of Ram Kanai and Dinabandhu, who were the brothers of Radha Krishna The name of one Kumeda Charan Roy, who was the father of the defendants Nos. 1 to 4, may be mentioned here. It appears that after the death of Radha Krishna, Kumeda Charan asserted that he had been adopted by Radha Krishna and laid claim to the estate left by him. In the year 1883, Sital Moni brought a suit for establishment of her right to a share of the estate as the heiress of her father Radha Krishna. The suit was brought against Kumeda Charan and the other heirs of Ram Kanai and Dinabandhu. It was contested by Kumeda alone and it appears that the other defendants were subsequently discharged from the action. The suit was terminated by a Solenamah entered into between Sital Moni and Kumeda Charan on the 24th July 1883. Under this Solenamah, the dispute between the parties was settled; Kumeda Charan, defendant No. 1 in that suit, gave up his claim as the adopted son of Radha Krishna and his claim to certain properties; Sital Moni also gave up certain properties in favour of Kumeda Charan and her right to the rest of the properties was declared. There was subsequently a suit for partition brought by Sital Moni which was based upon the Solenamah; and lastly there was a suit for mesne profits brought by the lady against the defendants, which again ended in a compromise. Sital Moni died in January 1902 and the present suit was instituted by her sons, plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2, for establishment of their right in respect of certain properties, their title to which had been denied or of which they had been dispossessed by the defendants.

The Court of Appeal below, agreeing with the Court of first instance, has given a decree declaring the right of the plaintiff in respect of the lands of Schedule I and disagreeing with that Court has given a decree for possession and mesne profits in respect of a one-third share of the lands of Schedule II. The claim with respect to the lands of Schedules III and IV has been dismissed by both the Courts below.

The plaintiffs have appealed with reference to the lands of Schedules III and IV and the defendants have preferred a cross-objection in respect of the lands of Schedule II.

The main question for consideration in this appeal is whether the compromise entered into by Sital Moni is binding upon the plaintiffs.

There can be no doubt that there was final settlement of disputes and of the rights of each party and that if the settlement was bona fide, it was binding upon the reversioners.

In the case of Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna

Narain (1) the Judicial Committee observed that that they had no hesitation in adopting the view taken in the case of Oudh Beharee v. Ranee Mewa Koonwer (2), where the learned Judges say as follows: "The true character of the transaction appears to us to have been a settlement between the several members of the family of their disputes, each one relinquishing all claim in respect of all property in dispute other than that falling to his share and recognising the right of the others as they had previously asserted it to the portion allotted to them respectively. It was in this light rather than as conferring a new distinct title on each other that the parties themselves seem to have regarded the arrangement, and we think that it is the duty of the Courts to uphold and give full effect to such an arrangement."

That case was followed by their Lordships in the case of Hiran Bibi v. Sohan Bibi (3). Their Lordships were of opinion that the facts of the case brought it within the decision in Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (1), in other words, that the compromise in question was in no sense of the word an alienation by a limited owner of the family property but a family settlement in which each party took a share of the family property by virtue of the independent title which was to that extent and by way of compromise admitted by the other parties. See also the cases of Mohendra Nath Biswas v. Shamsunnessa Khatun (4) and Shyam Lal Ghosh v. Rameswari Pasu (5).

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that no independent title was recognised by the petition of compromise and that, therefore, the case does not come within the purview of the decisions of the Privy Council. This argument is based upon the ground that the petition of compromise does not state that Kumeda Charan had set up his right as the adopted son of Radha Krishna; but we have to take the petition of compromise along with the plaint and written statement in that case. The plaint in that case distinctly stated that Kumeda had set up his rights as the adopted son and had dispossessed the plaintiff in that suit from her father's share in the family estate, and that it was for that reason that the suit was instituted. There is no doubt, therefore, that there was a dispute between the parties and it had been proved that Sital Moni and the present plaintiffs, who are the reversioners, would have been entirely deprived of the estate but for the compromise which was arrived at. By the compromise Sital Moni gave up some of the properties, similarly Kumeda Charan gave up some of the properties to which he had asserted his right as adopted son. The plaintiff No. 1, one of the sons of Sital Moni, was an attesting witness to the petition of compromise. The plaintiff No. 1 appears to have been an accountant in the District Judge's office and was quite capable of protecting the interest of his mother and his future interest as a reversioner. After a decree had been passed upon this petition of compromise, a suit was instituted by Sital Moni for partition of the estate. The estate was accordingly partitioned and it appears that Sital Moni and after her death her sons, plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2, have been in enjoyment of the properties according to the result of the partition. Lastly, there was a suit for mesne profits brought by Sital Moni and that suit was ultimately compromised by her. Both the present plaintiffs looked after that case and were attesting witnesses to the petition of compromise.

That there was a bona fide compromise entered into in 1883 cannot be, and is not, disputed. The very fact that one of Sital Moni's sons was an attesting witness to the petition of compromise negatives the possibility of any collusion between the parties. In the circumstances under which the suit was instituted by the lady, the compromise was beneficial to the estate, and was certainly not entered into for the personal benefit of the lady herself. In all these circumstances, the Courts below were right in holding that the compromise is binding on the plaintiffs so far as the lands of Schedule IV are concerned.

With regard to the lands of Schedule I, the lands which the plaintiffs claim as having been allotted to Sital Moni on partition, the Court below has declared the right of the plaintiffs. The defendants in this Court say that they did not dispossess the plaintiffs from this land and that the plaintiffs have no cause of action against the defendants. The respondents do not dispute the right of the plaintiffs to these lands and have no objection to the decree passed by the Court below for lands of this schedule, provided there is no decree for mesne profits. We think that the decree of the lower Court in so far as the lands of Schedule I are concerned should stand.

With regard to lands of Schedule II, the lower Appellate Court gave a decree to the plaintiffs for a one-third share of these lands. A cross-objection has been filed on behalf of the defendants so far as these lands are concerned. It is contended that the lower Court has proceeded upon some presumption. It appears, however, that there was no denial in the written statement that the lands of this schedule formed part of the joint family property and we are told that there is some evidence in support of the finding of the lower Court. We think that the cross-objection should be dismissed.

There remain only the lands of Schedule III. Both the Courts have held that no cause of action has been disclosed in the plaint and that it does not appear that these lands belong to the estate held by Radha Krishna. We are not disposed to interfere with the order of the lower Court so far as these lands are concerned.

On behalf of the appellant, objection was taken to the order for separate sets of costs to the defendants. The question of costs, however, is in the discretion of the Court and we do not wish to interfere in the matter.

The result is that both the appeal and the cross objection are dismissed. Each party will bear his own costs in this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 87 B OF 1915.

Present:—Mr. Stanyon, A. J. C.

SHRIPUJA—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

KANHAYA LAL—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 90—Ancient document—Presumption as to execution and attestation—Document, whether must be produced—Custody, proper, proof of—Interpretation of Statutes—Court, duty of.

The rule of presumption embodied in section 90 of the Evidence Act must be applied with exceeding caution in India, where forgery and fraud are not of rare occurrence. The necessity for such caution makes it necessary to give a strict and narrow, and not a loose and liberal, interpretation to the provisions of the law. [p. 951, col. 2.]

The Legislature, by the plain language used in section 90 of the Evidence Act, has limited the power of the Court to dispense with proof of the execution of documents relied on as evidence, to ancient documents produced in Court at the trial; and the Courts in India have no power to enlarge this legislative provision so as to apply it to cases clearly outside the enactment. [p. 953, col 2.]

The law makes the production of the document a sine qua non for the application of section 90. [p. 953, col. 2.]

Every ancient document for which a presumption of due execution is claimed, must be produced before the tribunal which is asked to make the presumption in its favour, so as to place it in a position to see for itself whether it bears upon the face of it such indications as convince the mind that it is genuine or "betrays from some anachronism or other inconsistency" that it is a fabrication. [p. 951, cols. 1 & 2.]

(Authorities reviewed and discussed.)

It is the duty of a party, who claims that an ancient document should be presumed to have been executed, to prove by clear evidence the fact of custody, in order that the Court may determine whether or not such custody was proper. [p. 954, col 1.]

The execution and registration of a deed of sale in Berar in favour of a person who does not take possession of the property which the deed purports to sell, but leaves it with the apparent vendor, raises no presumption that the apparent vendee ever had custody of the deed for the purposes of section 90 of the Evidence Act. [p. 955, col. 1.]

In interpreting Statute Law in British India the Courts must give effect to the plain language employed by the Legislature, even if it conflicts with what they conceive to be the policy or the intention of the law. [p. 953, col 1.]

While the Law of Evidence is designed to render the utmost assistance in the discovery of the truth, it does not relieve against the necessity of giving legal proof, any party who may be unable to adduce evidence [p. 953, col. 1.]

It is one of the canons of interpretation that every legislative exception to a general rule of law must be literally and stringently construed, and that there is no justification for extending it by analogy to include cases not reasonably within the purview of the language employed. [p. 951, col. 2]

Appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Akola, dated the 22nd October 1914

Mr. J. Mittra and Sir Bipin Krishna Bose, for the Appellant.

Messrs. F. W. Dillon and R. B. Oka, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are given in detail in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, but a synopsis of them is necessary to appreciate the questions of law involved in this appeal. The property in dispute is a house in the Akola District of West Berar which once belonged to one Ratanchand, who has now been dead for many years. The plaintiff, who represents a sect of Gujarathi Jains, having a temple to the north of the said house, claims title under a deed of sale, dated the 13th February 1896, executed by Gulab Bai, the widow of Ratanchand, the allegation being that Gulab Bai continued to occupy the house after the sale as tenant of the plaintiff till July 1900 when the defendants wrongfully ejected her.

The defendants represent another sect of Gujarathi Jains, having a temple to the south of the house in dispute, which thus lies between the properties of the rival litigants. The defendants' pleadings varied at different stages of the trial, but may now be stated thus:—Ratanchand sold the house to one Popatlal on the 14th February 1874; Ratanchand and Gulab Bai continued to hold possession as the tenants of Popatlal, rent free, upon consideration of keeping the premises in repair; and Popatlal sold the house to the defendants on the 13th April 1894.

The plaintiff denied the sales: he objected to Popatlal's deed of 1894 as not duly registered: he asserted that though Popatlal may have contracted to sell to the defendants in 1894, the contract fell through owing to the failure of the defendants to pay the price within the time stipulated: and he pleaded that any title Popatlal acquired by his alleged purchase in 1874, was extinguished by the adverse possession of Ratanchand and his widow and heir from 1874 to 1900.

The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was filed on the 13th August 1907. It was decided by the first Court on the 6th December 1911 and by the lower Appellate Court on the 22nd October 1914. Both Courts concurred in dismissing the suit, and the plaintiff has made the present appeal.

In its judgment the lower Appellate Court has set out the findings of the first Court in these words:—

1. "That the sale-deed, dated 13th February 1896, executed by Gulab Bai in favour of the plaintiff was proved.

2 That the defendants could give secondary evidence of the transfer in favour of Popatlal, as Popatlal was dead and his son stated that he could not find the sale deed.

3. That the sale deed of Popatlal being 30 years old and its copy having been produced, its genuineness was presumed.

4. That Ratanchand executed the sale-deed and sold the house to Popatlal on 14th February 1874.

5. That Ratanchand till his death and after him his widow Gulab Bai occupied the house as tenants of Popatlal.

6. That Gulab Bai had no title to transfer the house to the plaintiff".

In these findings the lower Appellate Court concurred. It also recorded further findings as given below:—

(7) That the occupation of Gulab Bai extended without interruption till the defendants ejected her in 1910.

(8) That the deed of 1894 executed by Popatlal was duly registered.

(9) That there was no agreement fixing a time for payment of the price by the defendants to Popatlal, and payment was duly tendered though acceptance was refused at the time of registration.

(10) That non-payment of the purchase-money did not invalidate the sale.

In accordance with these findings, and certain other findings on technical objections which require no mention here, the plaintiff's appeal was dismissed by the lower Appellate Court.

In second appeal the objections taken may be summarised in these words:—

1. That the defendants' title deed of 1894 was not registered.

2. That their failure to pay the price vacated the contract to sell

3. That the possession of Ratanchand and Gulab Bai should have been held adverse to Popatlal.

It will thus be seen that no objection was taken to the procedure of the Courts below in applying section 90 of the Evidence Act to this case: but as it seemed to me that my decision of the appeal might be materially affected by a consideration of that matter I gave full opportunity to the parties to argue the point, and advantage having been taken of it, I am competent under Order XLI, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code to rest my decision upon the conclusion which I may form in respect to the law connected therewith.

It will be seen that the title set up by the defendants primarily rests upon proof of the fact that on the 14th February 1874 Ratanchand sold the house in dispute to Popatlal. The allegation is that the sale was effected by a deed duly registered. The original of that deed should now be in the hands of the defendants. It has not been produced, and in the pleadings the defendants made no statement as to what had become of it It is now admitted that the deed was never delivered by Popatlal to the defendants. The defendants called Sonlal (D W No. 11), the son of Popatlal, as a witness. He was adopted as a son by Popatlal's widow after Popatlal's death, which took place in 1903. He was asked to produce the sale-deed of 1874, and a rent note said to have been executed by Ratanchand. He said he could not find them. He had evidently never seen them. This has been accepted in the Courts below as sufficient to prove that the original sale deed has been lost. Kanhayalal (P. W. No. 11) is one of the defendants. He was evidently called to prove that there was an agreement between Popatlal and the defendants regarding payment of the consideration of the sale of 1894. In the course of his testimony this witness made the following statements:—

"The house in dispute originally belonged to Ratanchand * * * Popatlal sold the house to me 15 or 16 years ago. As Popatlal held a sale deed of the house and other property, I took the sale of the house from him * * *. The sale in favour of Popatlal by Ratanchand was not executed in my presence. I saw the deed for the first time when Popatlal executed the sale in my favour * * *. The original sale deed by Ratanlal in favour of Popatlal may be with the latter. The rent note referred to in that sale deed is not with me. It was with Popatlal."

This is all the available evidence on the record relating to the original other than can be obtained from Exhibit D 2, which is a certified copy of the copy of the original retained by the registering officer. This copy was obtained from the registration office by the defendants in 1907, obviously for the purposes of this suit. The endorsement upon the copy proves that an original was presented for registration by Popatlal on the 14th February 1874, that execution of the original was admitted by a person identified to be Ratanchand Hirachand Guzrathi of Balapur in the Balapur Taluq of the Akola District, and that the document was duly registered. It is also fair to presume that the original document was returned to the custody of the person who produced it, though there is no entry to that effect in the registration record now before me. It will be remembered that Exhibit D-2 is not a copy of any part of the original document. It is a copy made in 1907 of a copy made from the original deed and its endorsements at the time of registration in 1874. It is to such facts that the Courts below have applied section 90 of the Indian Evidence Act, and have presumed not only that Ratanchand, the owner of the house in dispute, executed and registered an original in the terms set out in Exhibit D-2: but also that he thereby actually sold everything which the document purports to transfer to Popatlal. It is very obvious that there has been some confusion between secondary evidence of a lost original admissible under section 65, Evidence Act, and a presumption under section 90 of that Act in favour of the lost original based upon a copy thereof, and I wish to make it clear that I am now dealing only with the question of the applicability of section 90 of the enactment. That section is worded thus:—

"Where any document, purporting or proved to be thirty years old, is produced from any custody which the Court in the particular case considers proper, the Court may presume that the signature and every other part of such document which purports to be in the handwriting of any particular person, is in that person's handwriting, and, in the case of a document executed or attested, that it was duly executed and attested by the persons by whom it purports to be executed and attested.

Explanation—Documents are said to be in proper custody if they are in the place in which, and under the care of the person with whom, they would naturally be; but no custody is improper if it is proved to have a legitimate origin, or if the circumstances of the particular case are such as to render such an origin probable."

This explanation applies also to section 81. I am alive to the danger of paraphrasing an enactment, and I have no intention of doing so in the present case when I say that the section requires in the most unambiguous language the presence of three conditions to bring it into operation, namely:—

(1) a document which purports or is proved to be thirty years old;

(2) its production before the Court; and

(3) its appearance from "proper custody" as defined in the section.

This provision of the law deals with an instance of what is sometimes called "real" evidence—that of which the tribunal itself is the original percipient witness. The Judge sees for himself that the appearance of the document, its paper, ink, phraseology, handwriting and other things indicative of age are consistent with the claim that it is not less than thirty years old: and he then exercises his discretion in two matters, namely (1) as to the propriety of the custody from which the document is produced, and (2) as to the genuineness of the document. It is a fundamental rule of the Law of Evidence that in all cases the best evidence must be given, and it is a rule which the Legislature and the Courts jealously safeguard. It is simply an amplification of the obvious maxim that if a man wishes to know all that he can know about any matter, his own senses are to him the highest possible authority. If a hundred witnesses of unimpeachable character were all to swear to the contents of a sealed letter, and if the person who heard them swear opened the letter and found its contents were different, he would conclude, without the intervention of any conscious process of reasoning at all, that they had sworn what was not true. It is in obedience to this fundamental rule that 'hearsay' is treated as practically synonymous with 'irrelevant' for the purposes of the Law of Evidence.

Now section 90 of the Indian Evidence Act embodies an exception to the hearsay rule which has become established by judicial decisions in England, and in no way enlarges the scope of the exception recognized and laid down by the English Courts. It is, therefore, expedient to give some consideration to the English law on the point. The following remarks, taken from Taylor on Evidence, 10th Edition, are instructive and sufficient for our purpose:—

"Another conclusive presumption made by the law is that in favour of the due execution of ancient deeds and Wills. When these instruments are 30 years old, and are unblemished by any alterations, they (as it is said) prove themselves; their bare production is sufficient, and the subscribing witnesses are conclusively taken to be dead * * But it must appear that the instrument comes from custody, which (even though it is not in point of law strictly proper) affords a reasonable presumption in favour of its genuineness; and that it is otherwise free from just ground of suspicion * * * (Section 87).

The presumption in their favour, if they come from the proper custody, and purport to be thirty years old, is not confined to deeds and Wills, but extends equally to letters, entries, receipts, settlement certificates, and indeed to all other written documents; and in such cases the signatures and handwriting need not be proved. The rule is founded on the great difficulty nay, impossibility, of proving the handwriting of the party after such a lapse of time.' (Section 88).

* * * *

A third exception to the general rule by which hearsay evidence is rejected, exists in favour of ancient documents (by which is meant documents more than thirty years old), when they are tendered in support of ancient possession. These are often the only attainable evidence of ancient possession, and, therefore, the law, yielding to necessity, allows them to be read on behalf of persons claiming under them, and against persons in no way privy to them * * *

This species of proof demands careful scrutiny, for, first, its effect is to benefit those from whose custody they have been produced, and who are connected in interest with the original parties to the documents, and next, the documents are not proved, but are only presumed to have constituted part of the res gestæ. Forgery and fraud are, however, matters, comparatively speaking, of rare occurrence, and a fabricated deed generally betrays, from some anachronism or other inconsistency, internal evidence of its real character. The danger of admitting these documents is, consequently, less than might be supposed. It is more expedient to run some risk of occasional deception, than to permit injustice to be done by strict exclusion of what, in many cases, would turn out to be highly material evidence. On a balance of evils, this kind of proof has, subject to certain qualifications, for many years past been admitted. (Section 658).

But care is especially taken to ascertain the genuineness of the ancient documents produced; and this may in general be shown, prima facie, by proof that they come from the proper custody. (Section 659)."

The leading case on the subject of proper custody is Bishop of Meath v. Marquess of Winchester (1), in which the character and description of custody were clearly defined by Tindal, C. J., and section 90 of the Indian Evidence Act is obviously intended to reproduce as far as possible the principles laid down by that eminent Judge in respect of what is proper custody for the purposes of the section.

It is manifest from the above quotation that the idea of making a presumption of execution in favour of ancient documents not produced or tendered in evidence is foreign to the English law, and that it is apparently assumed that every ancient document for which a presumption of due execution is claimed, must be produced before the tribunal which is asked to make the presumption in its favour, so as to place it in a position to see for itself whether it bears upon the face of it such indications as convince the mind that it is genuine, or "betrays from some anachronism or other inconsistency" that it is a fabrication. I have been unable to find any English case in which a Court was asked to make a presumption in favour of an ancient document which it did not see.

It has repeatedly been held, and the soundness of the decision cannot be questioned, that the rule of presumption embodied in section 90, Evidence Act, must be applied with exceeding caution in India, where forgery and fraud cannot be said to be of rare occurrence. Phool Bibee v. Goor Surun Doss (2), Uggrakant v. Hurro Chunder (3), Trailokia Nath v. Shurno Chungoni (4), Raikunt Nath v. Lukhun Majhi (5), Timangavda v. Rangangavda (6), reported at page 94 as a Note appended to Hari Chintaman v. Moro Lakshman (7). The relevant passage is at page 98. It may be said that such decisions merely lay down a rule of caution and do not affect the scope of the enactment. It seems to me, however, that the necessity for such caution makes it necessary to give a strict and narrow, and not a loose and liberal, interpretation to the provisions of the law. Moreover, it is one of the canons of interpretation that every legislative exception to a general rule of the law must be literally and stringently construed, and that there is no justification for extending it by analogy to include cases not reasonably within the purview of the language employed. It seems to me that section 90 of the Evidence Act can apply only to documents produced before the tribunal invited to make the presumption which is allowed by the section in favour of them, and that it has been wholly misapplied in the present case. There is, however, authority against this view, and it is necessary to examine it. The first case is Khetter Chunder Mookerjee v. Khetter Paul Sreeterutno (8), which was decided by a single Judge. In that case a Will was allegedly executed more than 30 years before the suit and was proved to have been lost. A copy was tendered in evidence.

Wilson, J., held that under section 65 of the Evidence Act the copy was admissible to prove the contents of the Will: and that under section 90 of the same enactment execution of the Will could be presumed. The learned Judge's reasons for this extraordinary extension of the latter section are given in these words:—"Under the section the execution of a document produced from proper custody, and more than thirty years old, need not be proved, if the document 'is produced'. I do not think the use of these words limits the operation of the section to cases in which the document is actually produced in Court. I think that, as the document has been shown to have been last in proper custody, and to have been lost, and is more than thirty years old, secondary evidence may be admitted without proof of the execution of the original."

The concluding passage seems to confuse the grounds for admitting secondary evidence with the grounds for presuming execution of the original. The dictum seems, with due respect, to be wholly irreconcilable with the plain meaning of the words of section 90: and it is unsupported by any authority, English or Indian, dealing with presumptions relating to ancient documents. It cannot be claimed that a document which is lost is produced: nor can it be said in reason that a document which is proved to have existed is produced. Therefore, the decision treats the words 'is produced' as superfluous. It makes no pretence of giving them an extended meaning.

In Ishri Prasad Singh v. Lalli Jas Kunwar (9) the document in question was a petition made to a Collector on the 28th September 1831. This was held to have perished with the records of the Collectorate destroyed during the Mutiny of 1857. A certified copy granted on the 20th October 1831, or less than a month after the original was filed, was produced in Court in proof of the original. It was held that the copy was admissible as secondary evidence, which cannot be questioned. It is also manifest that section 90 applied to the copy itself since it was more than 30 years old: that is, it could be presumed to be what it purported to be—a copy duly certified of an original document retained in a public record. There remained the question of a presumption under section 90 in favour of the unproduced original. The learned Judge wrote:—

"Under section 90 we may presume that the document was duly executed.....To this it was objected that section 90 does not apply so as to warrant the presumption in question where the original document is not produced in Court, and in support of this argument great stress is laid upon the word 'produced' in the section."

The dictum of Wilson, J., in the Calcutta case, above examined, was then referred to, and the judgment proceeds:—'Although the matter is not free from doubt, we think that we should follow this ruling."

Here again we have no analysis of the subject. In a particularly strong case, upon the production of a certified copy, itself more than 30 years old, of an original forming part of a public record, the learned Judges yielded to the temptation of brushing aside what was the law in favour of what they considered ought to be the law for the purpose of doing justice in that particular case, and they could give no better reason for that course than that another Judge had previously strained the law in the same way. No attempt was made to adjust the view taken to the language of the section. In a case of admitted doubt the Judges elected to follow the course which seemed to them to be most consistent with truth and justice in the particular case before them. The ruling cannot be accepted as an authority upon an interpretation of the section. The fact that the original in this case was in fact filed in a Court would not satisfy the requirements of the section. The law demands the production of the document after it has become an ancient document.

The above decisions were quoted with approval in Sawan Singh v. Karim Bakhsh (10), where the dictum of a single Judge reproduced the concluding passage in the judgment of Wilson, J., already quoted above, with a similar confusion of secondary evidence and presumption under section 90. The learned Judge wrote:

"To rule otherwise would, in my opinion, be to misunderstand the policy of the Legislature. The obvious intention of section 90 of the Indian Evidence Act is not to make it too difficult for persons relying upon ancient documents to utilize those documents in proving their cases, and if the section is not to be applied to cases where the original is lost, that policy is not fully carried out; for when the original is lost, it is doubly difficult for the party concerned to prove the execution and handwriting and so on."

With due respect I would urge, first, that in interpreting Statute Law in British India the Courts must give effect to the plain language employed by the Legislature, even if it conflicts with what they conceive to be the policy or the intention of the law: and, next, that while the Law of the Evidence is designed to render the utmost assistance in the discovery of the truth, it does not relieve, against the necessity of giving legal proof, any party who may be unable to adduce evidence. If the argument of the learned Judge were carried to its logical conclusion, it would amount to this that, where a party is unable to prove his claim, ipso facto it must be presumed to have been proved. I am unable to assent to any such proposition, and I again point out that no attempt is made to find support for the view taken by the Punjab Court from any words appearing in the section itself.

In Appathura Pattar v. Gopala Panikkar (11) the Madras High Court refrained from expressing any opinion on the point, but in Ponnambalath Parapravin v. Sankaran Nair (12) a Division Bench, following the Calcutta and Allahabad cases, held that the presumption as to the genuineness of an ancient document under section 90 of the Evidence Act can be applied even where the original is not produced, but only a copy is produced. The judgment, so far as it turns on the question under discussion, is in these terms :—

"Whether the Court should presume the genuineness of the * * document is a matter that depends on the special circumstances of each case; and having regard to the circumstances proved in regard to the present document * * we think the Subordinate Judge was right in admitting it as evidence and in presuming that the original of it was genuine."

The document was filed in a public record and destroyed when the record was eliminated, and a certified copy was produced in proof. So the case somewhat resembled the Allahabad case. But here, as in the other cases, the learned Judges lay down a rule for which they make no attempt to find any support in the language of the enactment. In all the above cases the Judges were a law to themselves They did not interpret but legislated : and with due respect, I am unable to follow them. It seems to me indisputable that the Legislature, by the plain language used in section 90 of the Evidence Act, has limited the power of the Court to dispense with proof of the execution of documents relied on as evidence, to ancient documents produced in Court at the trial ; and that the Courts in India have no power to enlarge this legislative provision so as to apply it to cases clearly outside the enactment. Moreover, even if such a course were permissible, it seems to me a most unwise and unsafe precedent to lay down that, upon a production of a copy, the Court may presume that some document it has never seen was in fact an ancient document, was executed and attested by the persons whose names appear in the copy, and was in proper custody when lost. Such a precedent would strike at the very root of the rule of caution above laid down. It would be easy to say that presumptions based on copies in the absence of originals would be confined to special cases, such as that before the Allahabad Court in the rulling above quoted, and that the Courts must be trusted to act with due discretion. I cannot take that view. Once the presedent were laid down, it would be followed in all manner of cases and become a substantial aid to fraud and forgery. It is, however, not necessary to labour the point, as I am clear that the law makes the production of the ancient document at the trial a sine qua non for the application of section 90.

For the above reasons I hold that the Courts below erred in applying section 90 of the Evidence Act in this case, and as their judgments were influenced by presumptions which in law they were not competent to make, they are open to reversal by this Court : Grant v Bynath (13).

(11) 25 M. 674.

(12) 12 Ind. Cas. 453; 21 M. L. J. 991.

(13) 21 W. R. 279.

But even if section 90 of the Evidence Act had been applicable upon the production of a copy, what evidence is there that the original deed of 1874 was in the custody of Popatlal at any time, even suppose we believe every word stated in regard to it by the defendant Kanhayalal (P. W. No. 11)? He says that Popatlal "held a sale deed of the house". This may be merely a statement of what Popatlal told him. He also says that he "saw the deed for the first time when Popatlal executed the sale-deed" in his favour: but this does not show where and with whom the deed was at the time. It may be said that the evidence is vague because it was badly recorded, and that the witness may reasonably be taken to have intended to convey that he saw the deed in the possession of Popatlal and satisfied himself that Popatlal had a title to pass at the time when the purchase of 1894 was made from him. But is it justifiable to presume, not only that an ancient document is genuine, but also that its custody must have been proper though the evidence relating to such custody is uncertain? It is the duty of a party, who claims that an ancient document should be presumed to have been executed, to prove by clear evidence the fact of custody, in order that the Court may determine whether or not such custody was proper. In the present case custody should have been with the defendants. The lower Appellate Court gets over that by stating that "it is not always that the purchaser takes the title-deed from his vendor in these parts of the country" a statement for which there is no support to be found in any part of the evidence on record, and which is not the rule where the vendor has at hand and produces his title-deed at the time he makes his sale, as Popatlal is said to have done in this case. But suppose that the custody of Popatlal after 1894 was a proper custody for the purposes of section 90 aforesaid. I am clear that the evidence on record is legally insufficient to prove the fact of such custody. It was said that ordinarily a title deed presumably delivered by the registering officer to the person who presented it for registration may further be presumed to have remained in that custody subsequently. I should not be prepared to make that presumption in regard to any such document in Berar. It is a matter of common knowledge, of which I am entitled to take notice, that the people of Berar habitually execute and cause to be registered the most formal instruments which either represent no real transaction at all or give a wholly false colouring to the real agreement between the parties. As against the executants of such deeds it is no doubt the policy of the law to hold them bound by the writing, but for a collateral purpose, such as a presumption that the custody of a deed of sale must have been with the vendee, the execution, registration and delivery of the deed by the Registering Officer afford no safe basis, especially where, as here, there are circumstances which are contra-indicative of any delivery of the deed. Exhibit D-2 may be taken as good secondary evidence of the contents of the original deed, and the registration endorsement may be taken as some evidence of the execution thereof: Gangamoyi Debi v. Troiluckhya Nath(14)—though I do not understand that case to rule that the endorsement is sufficient by itself to prove execution. But one of the most common forms of fictitious transactions in Berar is that by which an owner of property, by the simultaneous execution of an apparent deed of sale and an apparent rent note or lease counterpart—no lease being executed—transforms himself into the apparent tenant of another.

Exhibit D-2 proves that the original purported to sell the dwelling house of Ratanchand and some unspecified moveable property valued at Rs. 5 for Rs. 500 to Popatlal. It then recites that the vendor continues to occupy the house as the tenant of the vendee in accordance with the terms of a separately executed rent note. This rent note is also not forthcoming. There is not a shred of evidence beyond the recital that it was ever executed. Such recitals, like those as to delivery of possession, are habitually false or representative of a promise or intention never carried out. It is an admitted fact that Popatlal was a near relation of Ratanchand. It is also admitted, or at any rate held proved, that Popatlal never had physical possession of the house for a single day, that Ratanchand continued to use and occupy it as before, and that after his death, more than 12 years before the suit, his widow, Gulab Bai, succeeded to such possession and occupancy exactly as if by inheritance. Neither ever paid a rupee as rent to Popatlal or to the defendants. These being the circumstances, no Court would be justified in law in presuming that in 1894, when he executed the deed of sale in favour of the defendants, Popatlal had custody of the original deed executed in his favour twenty years before, even if it could be safely assumed that the Registering Officer returned the deed to him after registration.

My decision, therefore, amounts to this :—

(1) That no presumption can be made under section 90, Indian Evidence Act, 1872, as applied to Berar, in favour of any document unless such document is itself produced before the Court invited to make the presumption :

(2) the execution and registration of a deed of sale in Berar in favour of a person who does not take possession of the property which the deed purports to sell, but leaves it with the apparent vendor, raises no presumption that the apparent vendee ever had custody of the deed for the purposes of the above section.

It follows from this that the foundation of the title relied on by the defendants fails, and that the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed. Two other points were pressed on behalf of the appellant, and I will merely state them.

It is an admitted fact that the defendants have never paid the price of the house to Popatlal or to his representatives, and that they have not filed the same in Court or made any deposit of it. The deed of sale was executed by Popatlal on the 13th April 1894: it was presented for registration by the defendants on the 13th August 1894 before a Sub-Registrar whose original power to register expired on that day. Popatlal's attendance was subsequently secured by the issue of process. He appeared on the 12th October 1894 and repudiated the deed on the ground that the agreement was that the price of the house was to be paid within one week of the execution of the deed, and as this was not performed, the sale had fallen through. The vendees offered to pay the price before the Sub-Registrar but Popatlal refused to receive it. The Sub-Registrar then registered the document. There is no evidence whatever to show that he obtained the sanction of the Registrar to do so after expiry of the four months to which his own jurisdiction extended. On these facts the contentions for the appellant are

(1) that the deed of 1894 is in law unregistered :

(2) that the alleged sale to defendants remains a disputed agreement.

It is not necessary to decide these points. The appeal is allowed. The decrees of the Courts below are reversed and the plaintiff will be given a decree for possession of the house in dispute. The defendants must pay and bear all costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 14—Suit filed in wrong Court—Plaint returned for presentation to proper Court—Time within which plaint must be re-presented—Limitation, extension of.

The latest date for filing a suit for possession of certain lands was the 16th May 1911. The suit was filed in the Court of a Munsif on the 15th May 1911. On the 4th May 1912 the Munsif returned the plaint for presentation to a Court having jurisdiction to try the suit and directed that this should be done within one month. The plaint was filed in the proper Court on the 1st June 1912:

Held, that the suit was barred by limitation; that the only period which the plaintiff was entitled to exclude was that provided in section 14 of the Limitation Act, viz., the period between the 15th May 1911 and the 4th May 1912 and that in order to save the bar of limitation the plaint should have been re-filed on the 5th May 1912, inasmuch as the Munsif had no power to alter the period within which the suit ought to have been filed. [p. 957, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the District Judge, Birbhum, dated the 2nd July 1915, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 25th March 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakravarti (with him Babu Baranashibasi Mookerji), for the Appellant. —The settlement was made by the Government under Act VI of 1870 on 16th May 1899, so the cause of action of the appellant arose on that day. The suit was filed within time in the Munsif's Court on 15th May 1911. But on 4th May 1912 the learned Munsif returned the plaint, giving the plaintiff one month's time to present the same to the proper Court. On 1st June 1912 the plaint was filed in the Subordinate Judge's Court. Under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code the Court has inherent power to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice. I further submit that the time should not be computed from the date of the actual settlement by the Government with the Zemindar but from the date when the Zemindar's possession became adverse to the Patnidars and the Dar patnidars. Refers to Ranjit Singh v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (1).

The lower Appellate Court has assessed the Zemindar's share of the profits of the lands on a wrong basis. The lower Appellate Court should not have taken into consideration the present produce of the lands but ought to have proceeded upon the letting value of the lands at the time of the resumption by the Collector. We are willing to abide by the agreement to which we came in the first Court with regard to the amount payable as between the Zemindar and the Patnidars. The variation of the decree of the first Court by the lower Appellate Court we cannot support.

Babu Ram Charan Mitra (with him Babus Satindra Kumar Roy Choudhuri and Biraj Mohan Mozumdar), for the Respondents.—The learned Munsif had no jurisdiction to extend the period of limitation, as that is tantamount to nullifying the provisions of the Limitation Act. Refers to Haridas Roy v. Sarat Chandra Roy (2). As regards the date from which limitation has to run, the other side makes out quite a new case here. Time was running against the Dar-patnidars from the date of settlement. Ranjit Singh v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (1) has no application here.

As regards Second Appeal No. 853, etc., we are ready to abide by the agreement.

Babu Baranashibasi Mookerji replied.

JUDGMENT.

No. 3274.

CHITTY, J.—The only question in this appeal is whether the suit is barred by limitation. The plaintiffs were the Dar putnidars and they were suing the Zemindar and the Patnidars for possession of certain Chowkidari Chakran lands which had been resumed and settled by Government with the Zemindar. In their plaint the plaintiffs stated that the settlement was made by the Government under the provisions of Act VI of 1870 on 16th May 1899 and they further alleged that the cause of action arose on that day. The suit was originally filed in the Munsif's Court on 15th May 1911, one day within 12 years from the date specified in the plaint. On 4th May 1912 the plaint was returned by the Munsif for presentation to the proper Court, the Munsif finding that he had no jurisdiction. The Munsif directed that it should be presented to the proper Court within one month. The plaint was actually filed in the Subordinate Judge's Court on 1st June 1912.

Two questions arose: (1) whether the Munsif had any authority to extend the period of limitation for one month or any other time, and (2) what Article of the Limitation Act applies to the suit and whether it is barred by time.

As to the first point, it is clear that the Munsif could have no such power. If any Court had power to alter the period within which a suit might be presented, the Limitation Act would soon become a dead letter. It was suggested that the Munsif might have such power under section 151 of the new Code and we were told that a Bench of this Court had expressed such an opinion. The case is not reported; but there is a reported case, Haridas Roy v. Sarat Chandra Roy (2), which takes a contrary view and distinctly lays down that the only period which can be excluded is that provided for in section 14 of the Limitation Act. With this opinion we entirely agree. In that view of the case, excluding under section 14 the period from 15th May 1911 to 4th May 1912, in order to be within time the suit must have been filed in the proper Court at the latest on the 5th May. Being filed on 1st June 1912 it was clearly out of time if the time runs from 15th May, as alleged by the plaintiffs in their plaint. In the Court of first instance, as also in the lower Appellate Court, this was the case which was put forward by the plaintiffs. In second appeal it has been urged on their behalf that the date should not be from the actual settlement by the Government with the Zamindar but from some subsequent date not specified, when it is said that the Zamindar's possession became adverse to the Putnidars and the Dar-putnidars. It was suggested by the appellants' Pleader that it might be 28th August 1911, when the Zemindar first settled the lands.

This is a case not made in the Courts below and, as I have said, no date was specified nor have any facts been put before the Court which would justify such a conclusion. But it is really immaterial to go into that question, because it is clear that time was running against the Dar-patnidars from the date of the settlement. We were referred to the case of Ranjit Singh v. Maharaja Bahadur Singh (1). That was a case under appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council from a Bench of this Court of which I was a member. In that case another Bench of this Court in an interlocutory matter had expressed an opinion that Article 113 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act (the Article dealing with specific performance of contracts) applied and not Article 144 (the Article dealing with recovery of possession of immovable property). This Court held that Article 144 applied and that opinion was affirmed by the Judicial Committee. It does not appear that any question was raised in that case that the period of limitation would run from any date other than that of the settlement with the Zamindar. In my opinion, it is clear that that must be the starting point of limitation. To hold otherwise would be to extend the period indefinitely; for instance, in the case of the Zamindar holding the lands in khas and not doing anything which was obviously hostile to the title of the Putnidars or the Dar-putnidars. Taking that to be the starting point of limitation, which was moreover the point taken by the plaintiffs themselves before they come to this Court, the suit is clearly barred and the appeal must, in my opinion, fail.

The appeal for the appellants was argued yesterday by Babu Dwarkanath Chackrabutty. He asked leave to allow his arguments to be continued this morning by his junior. We were not disposed to grant that request. There did not seem to be any reason why he should not appear here and continue his argument if incomplete, but we did give permission to his junior to cite two cases which he mentioned but had not been able to cite last evening. It is now objected that we have this morning declined to hear from the junior Pleader further arguments. In my opinion we are perfectly justified in so doing, and he could not claim to be heard.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Nos. 853, 854 AND 855.

The only question arising in these appeals is as to the assessment of the mesne profits in favour of the plaintiffs as the result of their decree. The point taken is clearly set out in the second and third grounds of appeal. It is urged that the lower Appellate Court has assessed the Zemindar's share of the profits of the lands on a wrong principle and that in assessing the Zemindar's dues the lower Appellate Court should not have taken into consideration the present produce of the lands but ought to have gone upon the letting value of those lands at the time of the resumption by the Collector. It is not now suggested that the time of the origin of the Putni or Dar-putni should be taken. It has not been seriously contended on the other side that this is not correct or that the sum at which the Collector valued the produce of these lands at the time of the resumption should not be taken as the basis. The parties came to an agreement in the first Court with regard to the amount payable as between the Zemindar and the Putnidars, and to that the appellants are willing to adhere. The result is that the variation of the decrees of the first Court by the lower Appellate Court must be set aside and the decrees of the first Court restored in all these cases with costs in this Court against the defendant No. 1 and the heirs and legal representatives of defendant No. 2 and in the lower Appellate Court against the defendant No. 1 only.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

Order accordingly.

Where the decree of a Small Cause Court is being executed by an ordinary Court, an order made by the latter under rule 89, Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, is appealable to the District Judge, and the High Court can entertain an application under section 115 of the Code from the order of the District Judge. C. No. 1457 of 1908.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastri, for the Petitioner.—The mortgagee had no right to apply to set aside the sale under Order XXI, rule 89, Civil Procedure Code. The property was sold expressly subject to the mortgage. The mortgagee's interest was only in the equity of redemption. See Muhammad Ahmadullah Khan v. Ahmad Said Khan (1).

Mr. V. Narayana Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The scope of rule 89 should not be cut down. Whether the property is sold subject to a mortgage or otherwise, the mortgagee's rights are not affected when he was not a party to the sale. See Kashmiro Bibi v. Hatim Ali (2), Srinivasa Ayyangar v. Ayyathorai Pillai (3).

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

The first point taken is that no appeal lay to the District Judge. The appeal was under Order XLIII, clause (j), Civil Procedure Code; and it seems to have been competent. It is argued by the learned Vakil for the appellant that Order L, rule 1

(1) 10 Ind. Cas. 863; 33 A. 481; 8 A. L. J. 356.
(2) 27 Ind. Cas. 831; 13 A. L. J. 273.
(3) 21 M. 416; 8 M. L. J. 54.

(a), excludes the application of Order XLI, clause (j), to this case. This is not so, as the small cause decree was being executed by the original Court, as that Court alone and not the Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to attach immoveable property. In fact the revision to this Court does not lie under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, as the order in question here was in execution by an original Court. I am, however, of opinion that the petition may be treated as one under section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

The second and the main question argued is whether the respondent, who is the mortgagee of the property sold in execution, is entitled to apply under Order XXI, rule 89, Civil Procedure Code, to set aside the sale. The lower Appellate Court has upheld his right to do so. The learned Vakil for the appellant urges that, as the property was sold expressly subject to the mortgage, the mortgagee has no interest in what was really sold, which according to him was only the equity of redemption. The sale proclamation shows that what was sold was the property itself, though subject to the mortgage, and not the equity of redemption. I do not see any good reason for cutting down the words "where the immovable property has been sold" in rule 89, as referring only to the actual interest that passed by the sale. The rule is a beneficient provision and it seems to me its scope should not be cut down unnecessarily. By its application, the decree-holder gets his money in full and the purchaser gets 5 per cent. for his trouble.

The case in Muhammad Ahmadullah Khan v. Ahmad Said Khan (1) has been relied on by the appellant. That is no doubt somewhat in his favour but that case was not followed by Knox, J, in the case reported as Kashmiro Bibi v. Hatim Ali (2), who pointed out that that case proceeded on its own peculiar facts. It thus loses much of its authority. The case in Srinivasa Ayyangar v. Ayyathorai Pillai (3) on the other hand gave an extended meaning to the old section 310 (a) so as to include mortgagees. The wording of section 310 (a) was somewhat more restricted in scope than the wording of the present rule 89, which allows anyone who has an interest to apply under it. It seems to me rule 89 clearly includes a mortgagee. It makes no real difference, in this connection, if the property sold was sold expressly subject to the mortgage or otherwise. In either case the mortgagee's rights cannot be affected when he is not a party to the sale. The appellant's Vakil concedes that in a case when the sale is not made expressly subject to the mortgage, the mortgagee can apply under rule 89. I think the position is the same even when the sale is made subject to the mortgage. The only difference is that in one case the purchaser may perhaps not be able to dispute the mortgage but in the other case he may. This difference, however, is not one that changes or alters the interest of the mortgagee in the property, but is only one that is in the nature of an estoppel.

I am, for the above reasons, of opinion that it is open to the holder of a mortgage on property sold, created prior to the sale, to apply under rule 89, even though his mortgage is admitted in the sale and the sale is subject to his right. The application fails and is dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), Sch. III Art. 3—Licensee refusing to vacate on expiry of license effect of—Possession, suit for—Limitation.

Where the licensees of a tenant refuse to vacate on the expiry of the period of their license, such refusal amounts to a dispossession of the licensor within the meaning of Article 3, Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and unless a suit to recover possession is brought within the period prescribed by that Article, it must be dismissed as barred by limitation. [p. 961, col. 1.]

PANCHU KAPALI v. JAJNESWAR MAJHI.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Khulna, dated the 8th May 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Khulna, dated the 6th June 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Ramgoti Sarkar, for the Appellant.—Article 3 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply to the case, but the 12 years' rule of limitation provided for in the Limitation Act applies to this case. The onus of proving that a case is not governed by the general law of limitation but by the special rule of limitation is on the person who alleges it: Rudra Narain Maity v. Natabar Jana (1). This the defendant has not done in this case.

Then, there was no dispossession in this case within the meaning of Article 3, Schedule III, of the Bengal Tenancy Act, because it is the defendant's case that possession was never delivered to the plaintiffs. "Dispossession" presupposes "possession." As to the meaning of dispossession, see Brojendra Kishore Roy v. Bharat Chandra Roy (2), Sundara Sastrial v. Govinda Mandroyan (3). See also Pollock and Wright on Possession, page 86

My next point is that the landlord did not dispossess the plaintiff but that he was the licensee of the plaintiff, and Article 3 does not apply to the case of a licensee. See Basanta Kumari v. Nanda Ram (4)

Babu Sajani Kanta Sinha, for the Respondent.—The plaintiff was in possession of the major portion of the holding although he was kept out of possession of a small portion of the holding. There is no doubt that it is, as has been found by the Court of Appeal below, a case of dispossession of tenant by the landlord, and so the special period of limitation provided in the Bengal Tenancy Act applies to the case.

Babu Ramgoti Sarkar replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of the plaintiff's title to 5 cottas of land and for possession thereof. Both Courts, after deciding in the plaintiffs' favour on the facts at issue, have held that the suit must be dismissed as being barred by limitation under Article 3, Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The facts as found are as follows:—The plaintiffs' father on the 7th Magh 1315 B. S. was granted a potta by the defendants. At the time of granting this potta the defendants were in possession of 5 cottas of the land and obtained permission of the plaintiffs' father to remain in possession during three months to enable them to remove their huts on the land. But after this period had elapsed, the defendants did not remove their huts and remained in possession adversely to the plaintiffs' father and afterwards to the plaintiffs.

It is first contended that the special limitation of the Limitation Act did not apply, because there is no evidence on the record to prove that the plaintiffs were raiyats. This point was not taken in the grounds of appeal to this Court. In both the lower Courts it appears that there was never any dispute that the plaintiffs' status was that of raiyats and I, therefore, refused to allow this point to be urged before me.

The next point taken was that the suit was not of the nature contemplated by Article 3, Schedule III; that it could not be a suit for recovery of possession, since the plaintiffs had never been in possession and that the Article could not be applicable as the plaintiffs never having been in possession, there can be no date of dispossession from which the period of limitation would commence to run. In my opinion there was in law dispossession of the plaintiffs. After the execution of the lease the plaintiff was put in actual possession of 7 cottas of the property demised, which amounted to delivery of possession of that property. The defendants' possession under their former right ceased and, therefore, the possession for three months after the lease was that of licensees of the plaintiffs. When the plaintiffs possessed part of the land themselves and the remainder was in the possession of their licensees, the plaintiffs were in actual or constructive possession of the whole of the 12 cottas. When their licensees, at the end of the period of three months for which their license was granted, refused to quit part of the land, they did in effect dispossess the plaintiffs. I would, therefore, hold that there was such dispossession as to make Article 3 Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act applicable.

It is lastly contended that the dispossession was not by the defendants in their capacity as landlords. The suit being one in which the tenants are the plaintiffs and the landlords are the defendants and the allegation being one of actual dispossession by the landlords, there can be no question of the applicability of the special period of limitation provided by the Bengal Tenancy Act. The question of limitation is the only point that arises in this appeal and as I hold the decision of the lower Court on this point was right, the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Proviso 1 to section 92 of the Evidence Act only permits failure of consideration to be proved by extrinsic evidence as between the parties to a deed and when such failure is pleaded for the purpose of invalidating a document. [p. 964, col. 1.]

Section 91 of the Evidence Act, read with section 99 of the Act, prevents a party to a deed in a suit against a third person from furnishing extrinsic evidence for the purpose of showing that the deed which purports to be a sale-deed is really a deed of gift. [p. 964, col. 1.]

When one member of a family transfers property to another member of the family and the transaction is a sham one designed to save the property from the creditors but not intended to transfer it to the transferee, any ostensible possession of the latter must be deemed to have been with the object of maintaining this design and it cannot be deemed to be adverse to the transferor. Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 25th January 1917.

The Hon'ble Mr. Wazir Hasan and Mr. Haider Husain, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff-respondent has sued for a declaration that he is the owner of a 12 annas 8-pies share in village Saraiyan, district Barabanki, now standing in the name of the defendants-appellants Nos. 1 and 2. The suit arose out of a suit for partition brought by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 against the plaintiff in the Revenue Court. The plaintiff objected that he was the owner of the whole of the village of Saraiyan and not merely of a 3 annas 4 pies share. The Revenue Court referred him to the Civil Court for a decision on this question of title. In order to understand the case it is desirable to set forth the relationship between the parties by the following pedigree:—

ABID ALI,

- Mansab Ali (has children or grandchildren alive); died 1908.
- Musammat Zainab-un-nissa, died 1913. Married to Mohammad Husain, died 1910.
  - Nazir Husain, (Plaintiff.)
  - Sadiq Husain, died 1899.
  - Altaf Husain, died 1910 (after Mohammad Husain).
    - Afzal Husain, (Defendant No. 2.)
    - Ilham Husain, (died a year or two after 1910.)
  - Dildar Husain, died 1904.
  - Ashfaq Husain, (Defendant No. 1.)

ASHFAQ HUSAIN v. NAZIR HUSAIN.

The facts, so far as they are necessary for the decision of this case, are as follows:—

The village of Saraiyan belonged to Mansab Ali, who was a Talukdar. On the 28th March 1879 Mansab Ali executed what purported to be a sale deed of this village in favour of the plaintiff in consideration of a sum of Rs. 4,000. The plaintiff was admittedly a minor of eleven or twelve years at the time. It is stated by the plaintiff also that his brothers were not in existence at the date of this deed, though it is scarcely credible that his mother after giving birth to no child for eleven years should subsequently have four other sons. This sale deed was immediately followed by the entry of the plaintiff's name in the village register as owner. In 1895, that is sixteen years later, the entry in the village papers was changed so as to show the plaintiff as owner of 4 annas and each of the other four brothers as the owner of 3 annas. The plaintiff maintains that he effected the alteration in entry for a double reason. He had intended to go to a Native State for employment and so wanted to facilitate the management of the property by his brothers. He also was indebted to some persons and thought that the alteration in the entry would save his property. Sadiq Husain was the first of the brothers who died. He died in 1899 and his share was entered in the name of his mother Zainab-un-nissa. The plaintiff's contention is that this entry was effected by himself for motives of policy but was not intended to indicate any transfer of ownership. In 1904 Dildar Husain died and his 3 annas share was likewise recorded in the name of Musammat Zainab-un-nissa. The plaintiff says that this was also effected by him but that he continued to retain possession as usual. In 1895 the plaintiff had mortgaged the 4 annas share standing in his name and in 1896 had executed a deed of further charge on it. To pay off these mortgage-debts he executed a mortgage deed in favour of another person in August 1897. His equity of redemption in this share was sold by the Court in execution of a simple money decree against the plaintiff and purchased by Mohammad Husain, the plaintiff's own father. The plaintiff maintains that the property was purchased by his father out of his, the plaintiff's, money and that, although mutation was effected in the name of the father, the plaintiff's title or possession was not transferred to the father. In 1910 Mohammad Husain died and the 4-annas share entered in his name in the Khewat was transferred to the name of Musammat Zainab-un nissa. The plaintiff maintains that he was responsible for this entry and that it did not effect any change in possession. At this time it will be seen Musammat Zainab un-nissa was entered in respect of 10 annas of the whole village. Later on in 1910 Altaf Husain died and on his death his 3-annas share was entered in the names of his sons Afzal Husain and Ilham Husain. As Ilham Husain subsequently died and his $1\frac{1}{2}$ annas share was entered in the name of Afzal Husain, Afzal Husain ultimately got the whole 3 annas. The plaintiff claims that these entries in favour of Afzal Husain were merely fictitious. On the death of Musammat Zainab-un nissa in 1913 the 10 annas standing in her name were entered in equal shares in the names of the plaintiff and the two defendants. Thus at the date of suit the plaintiff was entered in respect of 3 annas, 4 pies, Ashfaq Husain in respect of 6 annas 4 pies and Afzal Husain in respect of a like share. In his plaint the plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to the whole village by virtue of the sale-deed of 28th March 1879 by Mansab Ali in his favour. He maintained that all the proceedings by way of entering the names of his father, mother, brothers and nephew in the revenue papers were purely fictitious, as would be evident from the fact that he had held possession of the whole village all along.

In defence both the defendants allege that the sale-deed of 1879 executed by Mansab Ali in favour of the plaintiff was a benami transaction. Defendant No. 2 stated that the money came out of the pocket of both Musammat Zainab-un-nissa and her husband Mohammad Husain, while defendant No. 1 stated that it was paid alone by Musammat Zainab-un-nissa. They both maintained that the proceedings stated in mutation, which on their face indicated that the property was held in separate portions by the plaintiff and the other members of the family, were genuine. They denied that the plaintiff has been in possession of the whole village and pleaded estoppel against the plaintiff on two grounds. One ground was that the plaintiff by his action in consenting to the entries in the defendants' favour of the several shares was estopped from claiming those shares: the other ground was that he was estopped by section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure from claiming that the 4 annas share purchased by Mohammad Husain at execution sale was purchased benami for him, the plaintiff. After the written statement had been filed, the plaintiff was allowed to put in a replication. In this he resiled from his allegation that the property was sold to him by Mansab Ali as he could not pretend that at the age of eleven he had any money to pay Rs. 4,000, purchase price. He claimed, however, that the sale-deed could be treated as a deed of gift and alleged that Mansab Ali, seeing no chance of saving his property from his creditors and having great affection for the plaintiff, had gifted the village to him.

The learned Subordinate Judge has decreed the plaintiff's suit on the following findings:— He found that on the evidence of the plaintiff's own witnesses it was impossible to hold that the deed of the 28th March 1879 was a deed of gift. On the other hand, he held that the defendants' plea that this deed was a sale-deed nominally in favour of the plaintiff but really in favour of Musammat Zainab-un nissa could not be accepted in view of the evidence of Haji Mohammad Abbas, plaintiff's witness No. 26, who was brother-in-law of Mansab Ali and who attested the deed and in view of the fact that Mansab Ali had purchased (or rather repurchased) the village of Saraiyan only a few days before executing the deed in question, so that it was unlikely that he went to the trouble of purchasing the village merely in order to transfer it to the plaintiff. After these findings, which have not been seriously contested in the appeal before us, he went on to hold that, although the deed represented merely a sham transfer, yet, in view of the fact that neither the creditors of Mansab Ali nor Mansab Ali himself had ever challenged it, it must be deemed a valid transfer in favour of the nominal transferee Nazir Husain plaintiff. Having thus found that the title to the village vested in the plaintiff from 1879, he went on to find that the plaintiff had remained in possession of the village up to 1895, rejecting the defendants' evidence that the tenants paid Musammat Zainab-un-nissa their rent during this period. As to the mutation effected in the names of the plaintiff's brother he accepted the plaintiff's plea that this mutation was effected by the plaintiff to save the village from the plaintiff's creditors. In coming to this decision he rejected the plaintiff's evidence as to the existence of one of the two debts said by him to have been due at the date of mutation but accepted the plaintiff's own statement as to the other debt. He adds that, in coming to the conclusion that mutation in favour of his brothers was effected by the plaintiff owing to his being in debt, he is influenced by the failure of the defendants to prove their allegation that the village had been purchased by their mother under the deed of 1879. He rejects the defendants' plea that the mutation in 1895 was effected in consequence of a family arrangement on the ground that Musammat Zainab-un-nissa was found to be in possession even after that mutation, inasmuch as her husband Mohammad Husain continued to collect the rents for her. He also rejects the plea of the defendants that on the death of one brother Sadiq Husain in 1899 and of another brother in 1904 the mutation effected in favour of Musammat Zainab-un-nissa represented a gift by the heirs to her. Likewise, he rejects the defendants' plea that the 4-annas share purchased by Mohammad Husain in execution proceedings (which the plaintiff says was purchased nominally by Mohammad Husain but really by himself) was entered in the name of Mohammad Husain's widow after his death in pursuance of a previous gift by him to his wife in lieu of dower. (Neither of these two pleas have been pressed or the Subordinate Judge's finding impugned in appeal.) He finds that all the proceedings in mutation afford no help in finding out who was the owner of the village and consequently holds that the ownership of the village must be deemed to have remained with the plaintiff in consequence of his finding that the plaintiff acquired the ownership by the deed of the 28th March 1879. He accepted the plaintiff's plea that the purchase in execution sale by Mohammad Husain was really a purchase on his, the plaintiff's, behalf. As regards the question of possession he finds that the evidence afforded by the revenue receipts raises no inference as to possession. On the other hand be found that the present possession of the plaintiff was proved by the evidence of 25 tenants in the village. In any case he held that even if this evidence was inconclusive, possession must be deemed to follow title. Accordingly he also found that the plaintiff was in actual possession and so could bring a suit for mere declaration and that no question of limitation arose.

The first question that arises in this appeal is, did the plaintiff acquire a title to the village by the deed executed by Mansab Ali on the 28th March 1879? In our opinion he did not. The plaintiff has abandoned the plea taken in his plaint that the deed was a deed of sale as it purports to be. It is clear that this plea could not be sustained in view of the evidence and the impossibility of the plaintiff at the age of eleven having the Rs. 4,000 purchase-money. The plea taken up by him in his replication that the deed of sale was really a deed of gift has been rejected by the learned Subordinate Judge, on the ground that the evidence shows that Mansab Ali could not have intended to part with the ownership of the village and as a matter of fact continued to collect the income subsequent to the deed. This plea that the deed was a gift might also, in our opinion, have been rejected under section 91 read with section 99 of the Evidence Act. The plaintiff, being a party to that deed, was not entitled to furnish extrinsic evidence for the purpose of showing that the deed which purported to be a sale-deed was really a deed of gift. Proviso 1 to section 92 of the Evidence Act will not apply. That proviso only permits failure of consideration to be proved by extrinsic evidence (a) as between the parties; and (b) when such failure is pleaded for the purpose of invalidating a document. Neither of these two conditions obtained here. If the deed in question is invalid as a sale-deed, then it cannot be used as a deed of gift. A separate deed of gift is not set up.

It remains then to consider whether the learned Subordinate Judge's finding that the deed of 1879 acquired retrospective validity by reason of the failure of the creditors of Mansab Ali and of Mansab Ali himself to impugn it can be sustained. In the first place, we are of the opinion that it was not open to the learned Subordinate Judge himself to set up this new case on behalf of the plaintiff or permit it to be set up. No such case was set up until the case came to be argued. Certainly there is no hint of such a case in the plaintiff's plaint or replication. Apart from this, however, we agree with the appellant's Counsel that unless the deed of 1879 vested the village in the plaintiff, there must be some subsequent investitive fact and that the mere failure of the creditors and of Mansab Ali to impeach the deed cannot make the deed effective unless it was effective originally. The respondent's Counsel indeed has not seriously contended that this finding of the learned Subordinate Judge can be upheld in the particular form in which it was expressed. The form in which he would frame the plea is that a formal assignment not meant to effect a real transfer becomes an effective transfer when the transferor abandons all intention to take means to set it aside. It seems desirable to point out that where a debtor transfers his property with the intention of defrauding or defeating his creditors, the transfer may be either one or other of two kinds. It may be a transfer made by the transferor with the genuine intention of securing the property to the transferee, as the transferor prefers the transferee getting it to the creditors. In this case if the creditors do not get the transfer set aside, the transfer will be a valid one. The respondent is not entitled, however, to plead that the deed of 1879 represented a transfer of this kind, for two reasons. One is that, even if the deed was executed by Mansab Ali with the genuine intention of transferring the property to the plaintiff, still the deed failed to do this as there was no consideration. The other reason is that the lower Court has clearly shown that Mansab Ali had no intention of parting with the title to the plaintiff. The other kind of transfer made by a debtor to defeat his creditors is where the transfer is a sham one and is not intended to divest the transferor of the property. We concur with the lower Court that the transfer by Mansab Ali of 1879 was a transfer of this kind. As held in Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandy Servai (1), the deed of sale was inoperative and did not require to be set aside. It did not divest Mansab Ali of his title in the village or vest that title in the plaintiff. The respondent's Counsel has used the expression "title by estoppel." By this he appears to mean that, on the assumption that Mansab Ali was not entitled to sue to recover the property from Nazir Husain because the deed of 1879 was a fraudulent one to defeat his creditors, then Nazir Husain would become the owner by estoppel. This position is, in our opinion, untenable for two reasons. In the first place, there is no evidence that the creditors were defrauded and so we must presume that they were not defrauded on the principle of quod non apparet non est. If the creditors were not defrauded, Mansab Ali would not be estopped from avoiding the deed. (See the Privy Council ruling just quoted.) In the second place, supposing that it were proved that the creditors had been defrauded, an estoppel could be pleaded by the plaintiff as against Mansab Ali in a suit by the latter but cannot be pleaded by him in a suit against third parties like the defendants. There is in fact no such thing as "title by estoppel" in this connection. The respondent's Counsel also appears to think that, if Mansab Ali has not sued to set aside the deed or to recover the property from the plaintiff, then on the principle that a person who is in possession of land, although wrongfully, has a title to the land against all except those who can show a better title, Nazir Husain should be regarded as the owner of the village. As will be seen later, however, Nazir Husain has not been able to prove that he is or ever has been in exclusive possession of the land. In the second place, he is not basing his claim for a declaration on the title of mere possession but on the title of ownership.

The next question is whether the plaintiff can rely on title by adverse possession. This plea was not considered by the Subordinate Judge, who merely found that the plaintiff acquired ownership and possession by the deed of 1879 and did not lose possession by any subsequent event such as the mutations. The plea also was not raised in the plaintiff's pleadings. We might, therefore, refuse to consider it. Assuming that it is open to us to consider it, it is necessary to point out that possession adverse to the defendants is a different thing from possession adverse to Mansab Ali. As the defendants have been held not to have acquired any title by the deed of 1879, their plea that the sale deed was really in favour of themselves or their mother or their father having been rejected, there can be no question of adverse possession against the defendants. What appears to be really contended is that the plaintiff was in exclusive possession of the village for a period of twelve years or more preceding the year 1895 when mutation was effected in favour of his brothers and himself and that such exclusive possession was adverse to the real proprietor, Mansab Ali. Doubtless if this could be proved, the plaintiff would by 1895 have acquired absolute title against all the world under section 28 read with Article 144 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act. It is clear, however, in view of the fact that the whole family lived together in harmonious relations up to the year 1913 when Musammat Zainab-un-nissa died, that the evidence does not support the view that the plaintiff was in exclusive possession. The learned Subordinate Judge has rightly pointed out that the revenue receipts furnish no evidence. They are all in the name of the father of the plaintiff or of a karinda. The Subordinate Judge has held at one place in his judgment that these payments must have been made by Mohammad Husain acting as guardian of the plaintiff, but this conclusion is based on the hypothesis that the plaintiff became owner of the property at the date of the deed in 1879, as will be obvious from the remark of the Subordinate Judge later on :—"If Mohammad Husain made collections, the presumption will be made that he made them on behalf of the owner of the village. The plaintiff is the owner of the village." There is no evidence whatever that Mohammad Husain acted solely as guardian of the plaintiff and as the plaintiff must have been of age in 1886, it is inconceivable that the father was acting as his guardian from that year up to 1895. Exhibits 76B, 75 and 71 are receipts for money paid by Mohammad Husain in the years 1889, 1891 and 1892. Indeed elsewhere in his judgment the Subordinate Judge assents to the truth of the following statement made by defendant No. 1:—"Up to the time my father was alive he realised the profits of the entire family property." Again it is clear that this possession, such as it was, cannot have been adverse to Mansab Ali. On the finding that the deed of 1879 was a sham one designed to save the property from the creditors but not intended to transfer it to the plaintiff, any ostensible possession of the plaintiff must be deemed to have been with the object of maintaining this design and it cannot be pleaded as adverse to Mansab Ali. The plaintiff's Counsel at the conclusion of his argument admitted that, if the title to the village had not become vested in the plaintiff by the year 1895, it would be impossible to hold that he subsequently acquired title to the village by adverse possession or in any other way. It does not, therefore, appear necessary to comment at length on the evidence of the plaintiff's possession of the village subsequent to 1895. It may be stated that the revenue receipts are distinctly against such possession, several of them being in the name of Altaf Husain. (See the receipts Exhibits A4, A8, A14 and A22) As to the evidence of the 25 tenants that they have always seen the plaintiff in possession and that they have always paid rent to him, we regard this as only showing that, since the death of his mother in 1913 and the birth of dissension among the brothers, the plaintiff has been attempting to assert his sole possession of the village. Not a single receipt or lease executed by the plaintiff in favour of these tenants has been produced. As the eldest brother, the plaintiff would be the right hand of the mother and the business-man of the family. He may therefore, well have acted as manager of the village in his mother's lifetime and after her death irrespective of any title in it. In this connection we have to decide whether the appellants are to be allowed to produce in evidence two siyahas printed on pages 147 and 158 of the appellants' printed record and bearing the dates of 1319 and 1320 Fasli, corresponding to 1912 and 1913 A. D. The learned Subordinate Judge refused to admit these documents, which were put in by the defendants to prove that possession in the years 1912 and 1913 A. D. of the village was not with the plaintiff, on the ground that the papers were produced too late. Without going further into the matter, in view of the latitude given to the plaintiff in altering his pleadings after the framing of issues, we allow these documents to be admitted in evidence. They do not appear to be of much importance. Read with the evidence of the defendants' witness Abdul Hai Ziladar they prove that in 1319 and 1320 Fasli=1912 and 1913 A. D. collections were made on behalf of the mother of the plaintiff by Abdul Hai and not on behalf of the plaintiff. The plaintiff cannot avoid the effect of the several mutations made with his knowledge and consent in favour of the other members of the family, by his unsupported statement that the first transfer in favour of his brothers in 1895 was with a view to avoiding his creditors and that all later transfers were with a view merely to keeping up the pretence that the property was not his. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that of the two debts set up by the plaintiff as a reason for a fictitious transfer by himself one, being a secured debt, would not support his explanation and that as regards the other, there was no evidence except the bare statement of the plaintiff coupled with the failure of the defendants in proving anything to the contrary. This bare statement is obviously insufficient to prove that mutation was made to defraud the creditors. The plaintiff cannot succeed on the weakness of the defendants' case. We, therefore, hold that the plaintiff has not proved that he has been in exclusive possession of the village at any time or that his possession has been adverse either against the defendants or against Mansab Ali. We may next consider the question whether the plaintiff is estopped from pleading that the 4-annas share purchased about 1898 by his father Mohammad Husain was purchased benami by the father on his, the plaintiff's, account and out of money furnished by the plaintiff. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff would have been estopped from pleading this under section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure, if the sale certificate of the Court had been produced and had shown that the purchase was made by Mohammad Husain. He refused, however, to admit a copy of the sale certificate on the ground that the appellants filed it too late. It appears to us that the appellants have shown good reason for not being able to produce this certificate sooner. In any case we doubt whether it is necessary for the certificate to be produced in view of the fact that the plaintiff has in paragraph 8 of his plaint admitted that the property was purchased in the name of Mohammad Husain. We are, therefore, of opinion that at any rate as regards this 4 annas share the plaintiff is estopped from claiming title to it. The words "certified purchaser" in section 66 include persons standing in the shoes of the Court purchaser. The defendants are standing in the shoes of their father Mohammad Husain.

On these findings it is clear that the plaintiff's suit for declaration should have been dismissed owing to his failure to prove that he was entitled to any such declaration. The appellants' Counsel has, however, urged that the appellants have, apart from this failure on the part of the plaintiff, themselves proved their title to a 12-annas 8 pies share in the village. It does not appear necessary to deal at length with the questions raised by this contention. We concur with the learned Subordinate Judge in finding that the defendants have failed to prove that the deed of 28th March 1879 was executed benami in the name of the plaintiff or was really intended to transfer the property to their mother for the benefit of the whole family. We also concur with him that the defendants have failed to prove that they were exclusively in possession of the shares entered in their names from 1895 onwards. We concur again with the learned Subordinate Judge in holding that the applications for mutation in the names of the defendants with which the plaintiff concurred do not estop the plaintiff from bringing this suit. There is no question that when these mutations were effected, the defendants must have been aware of the true state of affairs, whatever it was, and so they cannot have been misled by any application made or supported by the plaintiff for the entry of their names. Reliance has been placed by the appellants' Counsel on the Privy Council ruling Jagannath Prashad Singh v. Abdullah (2). In that ruling at page 919* it was held that where the real proprietor of any estate caused a second person, whose right to get a conveyance from him of the estate had become extinct by renunciation or limitation, to execute a conveyance in favour of a third party and assisted that third party in effecting mutation in his favour, then the proprietor was estopped from claiming the property on the ground that he had caused the third party to change his position by assuming liability for the payment of revenue. This ruling, in our opinion, is not applicable to the present case, where no transaction through a second party intervenes and where it is not shown that there was anything more than a nominal liability incurred by the defendants to pay the revenue for the shares entered in their names. There is more force in the contention of the appellants' Counsel that the fact of the mutation in 1895 in favour of the defendants, coupled with a long series of admissions by the plaintiff of the defendants' rights to the shares so entered in their names, should be deemed to prove some family arrangement in 1895, whereby the various members of the family agreed to the property being owned or rather held in such separate shares. Three mortgage deeds, Exhibits A29, A30 and A31, were filed by the defendants for the purpose of showing that the plaintiff in them had admitted that he was only owner of a 3-annas 4 pies share. These deeds were not admitted in evidence by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that their execution was not proved. It is maintained by the appellants' Counsel that no proof of their formal execution was necessary as they were not being sued on but were only filed as admissions by the plaintiff. It was, however, at any rate necessary to ask the plaintiff whether he executed them, and this was not done. We, therefore, think that they were rightly excluded from evidence. But the statements made by Nazir Husain in mutation proceedings

Exhibits B4, B5 and B17 and Nazir Husain's evidence in a resumption case, Exhibit A33, are statements of the plaintiff which, although they do not operate as estoppel, certainly operate as admissions. It is to be remarked, however, that no such family arrangement was set up in the written statement, and it appears doubtful to us whether such a family arrangement can be held to be proved merely by the fact that certain subsequent events are satisfactorily explained on the hypothesis that it took place. On the other hand we do not agree with the Subordinate Judge that the collection of rents by her husband after 1895 was on Musammat Zainab-un-nissa's behalf and thus negatived the possibility of any such family arrangement. The collection of rents by Mohammad Husain is compatible with his being the common manager of the several members of the family in their separate interests.

For the reasons stated above we allow this appeal and dismiss the plaintiff-respondent's suit with costs in both Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), Ch. X, ss. 103A, 106—Record of Rights, entry in—Presumption of correctness—Suit for declaration that entry is wrong—Limitation.

The period of limitation applicable to a suit for the correction of an entry in a Record of Rights is contained in Article 120 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and must be computed from the date the cause of action arises, that is to say, the date of the final publication of the Record, and not the date on which the certificate of final publication is signed by the Revenue Officer. [p. 969, cols. 1 & 2.]

A certificate signed by the Revenue Officer is conclusive evidence of the publication of the Record, but the presumption as to the correctness of the entry arises from the publication which is provided for by section 103A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 969, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Backergunge, dated the 27th of March 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Court at Perojpur, dated the 17th of March 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Gunada Charn Sen (with him Babu Bimal Chandra Das Gupta), for the Appellants.—The learned Munsif was right in holding that the suit was a declaratory one and regard being had to this and other circumstances, he held quite rightly that the suit of the plaintiff was governed by Article 120 of the Limitation Act. The Court of Appeal below discussed the whole matter and was against the plaintiff but as there was a prayer for confirmation of possession, it thought that the suit was governed by the 12 years' rule of limitation and not the 6 years'. And here the learned Judge was wrong. Article 120 of the Limitation Act is clearly applicable to a suit of this nature, being one for the correction of an entry in the Record of Rights, and the 6 years are to be computed from the time of the final publication of the Record of Rights and not from the certificate.

Babu Broja Lal Chackerbutty (with him Babu Suresh Ch. Talukdar), for the Respondents.—If Article 120 applies, I submit the time must run from the certificate and if that is so, I am within time as my cause of action arose on 6th January 1908—the date of the certificate of final publication of the Record. Refers to section 103 A of the Bengal Tenancy Act and section 104 A (2) and section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and also section 111 B.

Babu Gunada Charn Sen replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's Karsha right to the lands in dispute, and also for a declaration that an entry in the Record of Rights with respect to the holding is incorrect. The plaintiff also prayed for confirmation of his possession of the lands.

The Record of Rights was finally published on the 16th December 1907 and the suit was brought on the 6th January 1914, i. e., more than 6 years from the date of the final publication of the Record of Rights

The cause of action was stated in the plaint to have arisen on the 6th January 1908, the date of the certificate of final publication of the Record.

Article 120 of the Limitation Act applies to a suit for a declaration that an entry in the Record of Rights is incorrect, and the period of six years is to be computed from the date when the cause of action arose. It is contended that the cause of action arose on 6th January, the date of signing of the certificate of the final publication. Now section 103A of the Bengal Tenancy Act lays down that "the Revenue Officer shall finally frame the Record and shall cause it to be finally published in the prescribed manner, and the publication shall be conclusive evidence that the Record has been duly made under this Chapter." Section 103B provides that a "certificate signed by the Revenue Officer stating that a Record of Rights has been finally published under this Chapter shall be conclusive evidence of such publication and every entry in a Record of Rights so published shall be presumed to be correct until the contrary is proved."

A certificate signed by the Revenue Officer is, therefore, conclusive evidence of the publication, but the presumption as to the correctness of the entry arises from the publication which is provided for by section 103A.

It is true that the period of limitation for certain suits provided for in Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act commences from the date of the certificate of the final publication of the Record of Rights [for instance, see section 104A (2), section 106]. But that is expressly provided for in the Act, and that fact in no way supports the contention of the appellants.

The Courts below, therefore, were right in holding that the plaintiff was not entitled to compute the period of limitation from the date of signing of the certificate (6th January 1908).

It was contended that as section 111B provides for stay of suit for the decision of certain issues (which includes the issues raised in the present case) within three months of the certificate of the final publication of the Record, the plaintiff is entitled to a deduction of three months.

But the Eastern Bengal and Assam Amending Act must be taken to have come into force on the 10th June 1908, the day on which it was published in the Gazette (as the Act does not mention the date on which it was to come into force) and three months from the date of the certificate (6th January 1908) had expired before the Act came into force. Section 111B, therefore, does not help the respondent.

The Court of Appeal below, however, held that as there was a prayer for confirmation of possession, the suit was governed by the 12 years' rule of limitation and not by the 6 years' rule. It is contended before us that a suit for confirmation of possession is governed by Article 120.

It is unnecessary, however, to decide in the present case the question whether a suit for confirmation of possession is governed by Article 120 or by the 12 years' rule of limitation. The plaintiff did not allege that his possession had in any way been disturbed or threatened to be disturbed by the defendants. The only cause of action alleged in the plaint was the alleged wrong entry in the Record of Rights. In the 7th paragraph of the plaint the plaintiff stated: "For the purposes of jurisdiction the suit is valued at Rs. 40, being the market value of the disputed lands, but the suit being declaratory one the plaintiff institutes the same on payment of a Court fee of Rs. 10 only." The Munsif treated the prayer for confirmation of possession as a prayer for "declaration of possession," and the plaintiff himself stated, as pointed out above, that the suit was a declaratory one. Under the circumstances we think the suit is governed by Article 120 of the Limitation Act.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is accordingly set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs of both Courts.

Decree set aside.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 41—Transfer by ostensible owner—Transferee taking in good faith after enquiry—Real owner, position of—Estoppel—Intention to deceive, whether necessary.

The object of section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act is to protect a bona fide transferee for good consideration, who has made proper inquiries, from being prejudiced by the conduct, however innocent, of the real owner in allowing the world at large to think some one else the owner of the property. In order to invoke the aid of this section it is not necessary to prove an intention on the part of the real owner to deceive, much less to deceive any particular person. [p. 972, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 28th February 1918.

Messrs. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava and Rameshuri Prasad, for Respondent No. 8.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by one of three sisters and the husband and daughter of another sister (as her representatives) for possession of a 7/36th share of three villages and one half of a building. The suit is brought against the three brothers of the three sisters and their three wives in whose favour those brothers have transferred some of the property in suit, against the third sister who has not joined as plaintiff and against a transferee of the three brothers of the rest of the property in suit. The suit was based on the following allegations. The father Imdad Ashraf possessed an eight-annas share in Husainabad, an eight-annas share in Karmayman and a six-annas share in Ulhepur. At the time of his death the first two properties were mortgaged to defendant No. 8, under a deed, dated the 23rd January 1905, for Rs. 14,500. Some of this mortgage-debt had been paid off by the sale of some property with which we are not concerned. The father died on the 11th May 1906. Mutation was effected in favour of the three brothers on the 28th August 1906, and on the 11th October 1906 the three brothers hypothecated by a simple mortgage the eight-annas share in Husainabad and the eight-annas share in Karmayman to defendant No. 8 for Rs. 14,500. The consideration was made up by the balance due from the father in respect of the deed executed by him on the 23rd January 1905 and by other advances to the brothers, secured and unsecured. On the 3rd of August 1909 two possessory mortgages were substituted for the simple mortgage. Again on 23rd August 1910 the six-annas share in Ulhepur was mortgaged by the three brothers to defendant No. 8 who obtained a decree for foreclosure, which was made absolute on 19th December 1914. Meanwhile the equity of redemption in the eight-annas share of Husainabad had been sold by the three brothers on the 27th June 1913. The three brothers later on executed transfers of the house to their wives. The plaintiffs in paragraph 4 of the plaint state in anticipation of the defence that the original mutation, five months after their father's death, was effected in favour of the three brothers without their knowledge. The plaintiffs base their claim to the property on the ordinary Muhammadan Law whereby daughters get a share, and urge that nothing which has been done by the brothers can affect their right to recover the property from the brothers and the transferee. None of the parties contested the suit except defendant No. 8. He got up a custom whereby the daughters were excluded. He also urged section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act pleading that by allowing the mutation to go unchallenged, the sisters had given their implied consent to the brothers being in ostensible possession and that he, the transferee, was a transferee in good faith and for consideration after due inquiry. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the custom was not proved, but he found that the plea that the sisters were estopped under section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act was made out and dismissed the suit.

In appeal to this Court it is urged that the lower Court's finding was wrong, because the brothers were not ostensible owners in possession with the consent, express or implied, of the plaintiffs and also that the defendant No. 8 had not taken reasonable care to ascertain that the brothers had power to make the transfers in his favour. No objection was taken by the plaintiffs-appellants to the dismissal of the suit as against the wives of the three brothers. The appellants' Counsel seeing the significance of this fact stated to this Court that this omission was a mistake but we are disposed to think that the omission was not due to a mistake but to the fact that the brothers have sided with the plaintiffs in attempting to prevent defendant No. 8 from getting advantage of his transfers.

The point then for us to decide in this appeal is whether the lower Court is right in finding that the plaintiffs are estopped under section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act. The ground may be cleared by our stating that we fully agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the inquiries made by defendant No. 8, when the brothers executed the mortgage-deed of 11th October 1906, were sufficient. We see no reason to disbelieve the evidence of the defendant No. 8 as to the inquiries he made. The plaintiffs' witness Ekram Ashraf (one of the three brothers) would have us believe that he at the time of the mortgage protested to defendant No. 8 that the sisters had a share in the mortgaged property and that, notwithstanding this, the defendant No. 8 accepted the three brothers as sole owners. His evidence is transparently false. Defendant No. 8 is a banker and would not have knowingly accepted a transfer which was bound to lead to objection and litigation. It has been urged that the defendant No. 8, Chhote Lal, though he inquired from the Patwaris and from the Registrar Kanungo whether any objections had been made by the daughters or the widow of Imdad Ashraf to mutation, did not call the Registrar Kanungo or question the Patwaris (who were produced as witnesses) as to this. It was very unlikely that the Registrar Kanungo or the Patwaris would remember whether he asked them or not. He proves that he saw certified copies of the mutation orders. The mutation orders in respect of Husainabad and Ulhepur are on the file. They do not show that the names of the three brothers alone were entered, but it is not disputed that their names alone were entered and khewats prove this. We are, therefore, only concerned with the question whether the conduct of the sisters in not objecting to the mutation in favour of the three brothers alone and the execution of the mortgage-deed by the three brothers alone, amounts to implied consent. It is common ground that there was no express consent. It is to be observed in limine that the plaintiffs' case is not that, while aware of the mutation in favour of the three brothers alone and of the execution of the deed of the 11th October 1906 by the three brothers, they were ignorant of the possible effect of allowing such mutation and such execution to go unchallenged. In other words, it is not their case that they gave a consent but not an intelligent one. For this reason we would rule out at once all the arguments based on an alleged practice in India not to press a presumption by acquiescence against pardanashin ladies, especially Muhammadan ones. If there was no consent whatever, the question of an unintelligent consent does not arise. The only question indeed which has to be decided is whether the sisters knew of the mutation proceedings and the execution of the deed by the brothers. The lower Court has inferred their knowledge of these facts from the conduct of the sisters at a later date. In particular it points out the fact that, when the simple mortgage of the 11th October 1906 was changed in 1909 to usufructuary mortgages, these sisters must at once have become aware of the diminution of the income of the family. It is not denied that the sisters and all the brothers lived together with the mother. It is true that if these sisters first came to know of what happened in 1906 by loss of income in 1909, this fact could not be used in itself to make the mortgage of 1906 binding on them. We agree, however, that their failure to make any protest in 1909, when they should have been put on their guard to find out what was the reason of the diminution of the family income, and when, if they had made inquiries, they would have found out about the mutation and execution of the deed in 1906, does suggest that they really knew of the proceedings in 1906. This inference is further strengthened by other considerations. We cannot believe that the three brothers entered into a conspiracy within six months of their father's death to defraud the sisters of their share. The evidence of their own witness (one of the brothers Ekram Ashraf), though quite useless to prove anything for the plaintiffs, does show that it was incredible that the brothers were trying to defraud the sisters. In this case the brothers are obviously working with the sisters. Ekram Ashraf himself does not admit any such dishonesty on the part of himself or his two brothers. There is also the presumption in favour of the brothers having acted honestly as regards the sisters. Now if the brothers were not conspiring against the sisters, it was inevitable that the sisters should know in a united household what was going on. In our opinion, they must have known not only that the brothers were obtaining mutation but also that they were raising money on the property. The money was needed for the funeral ceremonies of the father. The tightness of money and the necessity of spending it on their father's funeral ceremonies must have been known to the sisters. The defendant No. 8 deposes that the three brothers represented to him that the sisters were excluded by custom from any share. We see no reason to disbelieve this. If this was the case, the inference is that the sisters believed the same, rightly or wrongly, and we are constrained to hold that the reason for their not offering opposition to the mutation in favour of the three brothers only and the execution of the mortgage deed by those three brothers only was that they shared their brothers' belief that they had no right to any share. Their case not being that they allowed the brothers to be ostensible owners by reason of their ignorance of their rights, it does not appear necessary to set up a case for them on this basis. Assuming, however, that they allowed the brothers to be ostensible owners owing to their ignorance of their rights, this is no bar to the application of section 41. It is quite a different thing from an unintelligent consent. They were labouring under a mistake of fact and their amount of intelligence does not affect the matter. If it be argued that more intelligent persons would not have so readily accepted the fact that they had no title, the answer is that, as we have already stated, the brothers themselves were under that belief. It is to be noted that these sisters have not come into the witness-box themselves. In conclusion, therefore, we find that the plaintiffs, who had to make out their case, have failed to prove that the mutation and execution of the deed was behind their back and that if we allow them to change their case and plead that they gave an unintelligent consent to their brothers being ostensible owners by reason of their ignorance as pardanashin Muhammadan ladies, the answer is that the consent they gave was based on a belief shared by the brothers and, as shown by the evidence of the defendant No. 8, shared by the oldest and also the most influential person in the village. In these circumstances we do not think that the consent could be called an unintelligent one, even if this plea were permissible.

It merely remains to refer to two arguments of the learned Counsel for the appellants. He states that mere acquiescence does not amount to consent under section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act unless there is a duty to speak. The duty he refers to is a moral one and not legal one. No one can deny that when the sisters knew that the brothers were dealing with the property as sole owners and when they knew that mutation had been effected in their names alone, it was their duty to protest. His second argument is that to constitute an estoppel the sisters must have intended to deceive, by conduct amounting to misrepresentation, the defendant No. 8. In our opinion in order to invoke section 41 it is not necessary to prove an intention to deceive, much less an intention to deceive any particular person. The object of section 41 is to protect a bona fide transferee for good consideration, who has made proper inquiries, from being prejudiced by the conduct, however innocent, of the real owner in allowing the world at large to think some one else the owner of the property. For the above reasons we agree with the finding of the lower Court.

Having regard to this finding it is unnecessary for us to go into the question whether the lower Court was right in finding that the custom of exclusion was not proved. We dismiss this appeal with costs.

A Receiver under the Provincial Insolvency Act is exactly in the same position as the trustee in bankruptcy. The whole of the property of the insolvent vests in him and he remains the owner thereof uutil he is discharged, and in this respect there is a difference between the appointment of such Receiver and one appointed in an action. The sanction of the Court, therefore, is not necessary to the institution of a suit against a Receiver appointed under the Provincial Insolvency Act. [p. 973, col 2.]

A plea that a co-contractor was discharged by bankruptcy or an order of discharge is a good replication to a plea in abatement of the suit for non-joinder. It is no answer to a claim that if one of the co-contractors becomes insolvent the others are not liable. [p. 973, col. 2, p. 974, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

No. 3026 of 1915.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal arising out of a suit to recover rent in arrears. Three persons were originally joined. They were three tenants. There is not a word in this case that they are the heirs, or are holding the property as the heirs, of the former owner. The case against them is that they are three tenants on the land and they are liable to pay. It is quite true that they are brothers and, therefore, they would have a common ancestor; but the suit was not framed on that ground, nor was that the question in debate in the lower Courts. In this case the defendant No. 1 was adjudicated an insolvent under the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act prior to the institution of the suit. There seems to be a little misunderstanding in the lower Courts as to the effect of the insolvency. The first defendant was stated as being represented by a Receiver, the Nazir of the Alipore Judge's Court. That was not a strictly accurate position either. A Receiver under the Provincial Insolvency Act is exactly in the same position as the trustee in bankruptcy. The whole property of the insolvent is vested in him and he is the owner of the property until he is discharged. In the present case, the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court seems to have considered that the plaintiff was in contempt in instituting this suit against the Receiver without the previous sanction of the Judge having the carriage of the proceedings in which the Receiver had been appointed. That is obviously a mistake. That rule only applies to cases where the Receiver is appointed in an action and does not apply to a Receiver as mentioned in the Provincial Insolvency Act, who is really what is known in the old English Law as an Assignee in bankruptcy. There is nothing in that point. What happened is this. The suit was dismissed as against the insolvent and decreed as against the solvent tenants. It is said that the defendants are entitled to plead in abatement and as the suit has not been successful as against the insolvent, therefore, it must be equally unsuccessful against the solvent tenants. The law in England clearly was not so under the old form of pleadings. Replication to a plea of non-joinder that a co contractor was discharged by bankruptcy or an order of discharge was a perfectly good replication to a plea in abatement. It is no answer to the plaintiffs' claim against the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 that if one of the co-contractors becomes an insolvent the other persons are not liable to pay the rent. In my opinion, the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court is correct. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs to be paid by the defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The insolvent must make such arrangement as he thinks fit for the payment of his own costs.

Any rights that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 may have under the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act to prove against the estate of the insolvent, if and when they pay and satisfy the decree, will not be prejudiced by the present judgment.

Nos. 3307 AND 3308 OF 1915.

These cases will be governed by the judgment that has just been delivered in Appeal No. 3026.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is a perpetual lessee of some land in the village Bhadohi. He issued a notice of ejectment against the defendants in October 1915, treating them as tenants-at-will. The defendants contested the propriety of that notice on the ground that they held the said land as sankalpdars. The Revenue Court held that they were sankalpdars and cancelled the notice. The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit for a declaration that the defendants were not sankalpdars or under-proprietors of the land in suit but were mere tenants. The Courts below dismissed the claim. Their finding is that the defendants never claimed under-proprietary rights and that the plaintiff had, therefore, no cause of action.

It appears from the written statement filed by the defendants in this suit that their allegation was that they held the disputed land as sankalpdars from the Shahi time, that the predecessors-in-title of the plaintiff sought to eject the predecessors of the defendants from the said land along with other plots, but the latter contested the notice and a compromise was entered into by which the right of the predecessors-in-title of the defendants as sankalpdars of the said land was recognised, and that the claim was barred by section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was not, however, sufficiently clear from the written statement whether the defendants were claiming under-proprietary rights or merely the rights of a privileged tenant. The Court of first instance, therefore, called upon the Pleader for the defendants to state what the nature of their claim was. His reply was that the defendants had been in possession of the land in suit as sankalpdars on a favourable rate of rent for over 50 years, and that they might be declared as under proprietors of the land by the Rent Court under the Resumption Chapter of the Oudh Rent Act, but no declaration had till then been made. He further said that the rights of the defendants had ripened into under-proprietary rights under section 107H of the Oudh Rent Act.

As pointed out in Janki Prasad v. Salig Ram (1) and Sita Ram v. Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad (2) some sankalps are under-proprietary holdings, while others are not. A sankalp is a grant; but a grant may be a grant of a lease hold and heritable but non-transferable tenure, not liable to termination at the will of the grantor or on the happening of any contingency. The former invests the sankalp holder with the status of a mere privileged lessee; but the latter makes him an under-proprietor. The decision in Kalka Singh v. Suraj Bali Lal (3) is an instance of the former and that in Data Ram v Deokali (4) is an instance of the latter. The terms of the sankalp grant have to be ascertained in each case for the determination of the nature of the interest created. Here no evidence was adduced by the defendants to show the terms of the grant, and it must be taken as if in fact the defendants admitted that their position was not higher than that of privileged tenants, holding by reason of the sankalp at a favourable rate of rent. The vagueness as to the nature of the rights which the defendants possessed, renders it desirable that the Civil Court should expressly declare that except as regards such under proprietary rights as may be acquired by the defendants under section 107H of the Oudh Rent Act, they hold no pre existing under-proprietary rights by virtue of the original grant. Such a declaration will set at rest the possibility of a future controversy with regard to the same. The order of the Revenue Court, cancelling the notice of ejectment, left the matter in an uncertain state and the present suit, which was filed in order to clear up the position, cannot, therefore, be regarded as completely devoid of any cause of action. But for the statement made by the Counsel for the defendants in the Court of first instance on the date of the settlement of the issues, the matter may well have remained in hopeless uncertainty.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the plaintiff is granted a declaration that except in so far as any under-proprietary rights may be acquired by the defendants under section 107H of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), they hold no pre-existing under-proprietary rights in the disputed land by virtue of the original grant as sankalpdars. The parties will in the circumstances bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal against the decree of the Special Judge, Dacca, dated the 14th of March 1918, reversing that of the Assistant Settlement Officer of that district, dated the 23rd of May 1917.

Babus Gunada Charan Sen and Prasanta Bhusan Gupta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought under the provisions of section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and relates to Dag No. 129 of the Settlement Khatian. In the record the plaintiffs' names are entered as occupancy raiyats in respect of an undivided $\frac{1}{3}$rd share of this plot and as tenure-holders in respect of the remaining $\frac{2}{3}$rds. Plaintiffs' case is that the whole Dag is within Mehal No. 2685 and they have Howla right to the whole of the Dag. This Dag is according to the Thak included in two different Mehals Nos. 2661 and 2685, $\frac{1}{3}$rd falling within the former and $\frac{2}{3}$rds within the latter. The Assistant Settlement Officer decreed the plaintiffs' suit and held that they were Howladars in respect of the whole Dag. He doubted the correctness of the Thak, but held that even if correct there is no proof that some arrangements were not made between the proprietors of the two estates after the Thak survey by which the entire plot in suit came to be held by proprietors of estate No. 2685. He accordingly held that plaintiffs' title as Howladars to the whole Dag was established and that the plaintiffs had proved their possession for more than 12 years of the land in suit in assertion of their Howla right to the knowledge of the landlords.

The finding regarding the plaintiffs' title was largely based on certain documents to some of which the defendants' predecessors were parties and in which the plaintiffs' Howla right in respect of certain lands, which were described in those documents as Radha Krishna Khet, was recognised. The evidentiary value of these documents depended on the identity of Radha Krishna Khet with the land in suit. The Assistant Settlement Officer held that the identity was established. The learned Special Judge was, however, of opinion that this identity was not established. He accordingly thought that the documents relied on were of no value in establishing the plaintiffs' title. He was also of opinion that the plaintiffs had failed to prove their case, that the Thak survey was accurate and was supported by evidence adduced on behalf of the defendants, and that there was nothing to show that any exchange had taken place between the proprietors of the two estates. Upon this view of the case he held that the plaintiffs' title was not established. This is a question of fact as to which the decision of the learned Special Judge is final.

The finding of the Assistant Settlement Officer on the question of adverse possession was also to a large extent based on the same assumption regarding the identity of Radha Krishna Khet with the land in dispute. However, the learned Special Judge reversed the finding of the Assistant Settlement Officer on the question of adverse possession on another ground. He was of opinion that the issue was improperly allowed to be raised after the evidence was closed and inspite of the protest of the defendants. It has been argued that the learned Special Judge was under a misapprehension and that the issue was raised before the witnesses were examined. This may be so, but I do not think the appeal should succeed on this ground.

In this case the possession of the plaintiffs is not denied and in order to get a decree against their landlords the plaintiffs were bound specially to allege, not only that they were in possession for a long time, but also that they were in such possession on the assertion of their Howla right to the knowledge of the defendants. No such allegation is to be found in the plaint. The plaint was at no time sought to be amended. On the same day that the new issue was framed the parties were ready with their witnesses and these witnesses were examined on the same day. The defendants, therefore, were quite justified in objecting that they were taken by surprise and that the issue should not have been framed at that stage as it did not arise upon the pleadings of the parties. I think, therefore, the learned Special Judge was right in ruling out the issue relating to adverse possession.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

REFERRED CASE No. 4 OF 1919.

October 1, 1919.

Present:—Sir Abdur Rahim, KT., Officiating Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar.

THE SECRETARY TO THE COMMISSIONER, SALT, ABKARI AND SEPARATE REVENUE, MADRAS—PETITIONER

S. R. M. A. R. RAMANATHAN CHETTI, MINOR, BY GUARDIAN VALLIAMMA ACHI—RESPONDENT.

Income Tax Act (VII of 1918*), ss.* 3, 9, 51—Reference to High Court under s. 51—Right to begin—Business carried on outside British India—Income, whether liable to assessment.

In the case of a reference made to the High Court under section 51 of the Income Tax Act by the Board of Revenue, the assessee on whose application the reference is made is entitled to be heard first. [p. 977, col. 1.]

Where the only part taken by the proprietor of a business, carried on on his behalf by his agents outside British India, is to acquaint himself with the state of the business and occasionally to issue instructions, he is not liable to be taxed under the Income Tax Act in respect of the income of such business. [p. 981, col. ; p. 982, col. 2; p. 986, col. 1.]

Case stated under section 51 of the Income Tax Act of 1918 by the Secretary to the Commissioner, Salt, Abkari and Separate Revenue, Madras.

FACTS.—Reference by the Board of Revenue under section 51 of Act VII of 1918 (The Indian Income Tax Act). The assessee was the sole owner of a hundi business carried on outside British India through an agent. The question arose whether he was liable to be assessed in respect of the profits of such business, he being a permanent resident in British India. It was found that the assessee was in the habit of issuing "general instructions" to his agent but the reference did not disclose what the nature of such instructions was. The Board, however, inferred a control of the business from the fact of such instructions being given.

This case came on for hearing on 2nd September 1919 and Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondent, having raised the preliminary question as to who has the right to begin the arguments in the case, upon perusing the letter of reference and hearing the arguments of Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar and Mr M. Subbaraya Aiyar, for the Respondent, and of the Hon'ble the Advocate-General, for the Petitioner, the Court made the following ORDER.—We think that on this reference made under section 51 of the Indian Income Tax Act VII of 1918, the assessee on whose application reference was made by the Board of Revenue is entitled to be heard first. The Board of Revenue under the section is bound to refer the question on an application made for the purpose by the assessee, and when the question is referred to the High Court, the High Court after hearing the case is to deliver judgment and the judgment so delivered will be sent to the Revenue Authorities. There is no ruling on the point, and we have not been able to ascertain whether there has been any uniform practise on any similar reference, but having regard to the nature of the reference in this case and how it originated, that is, on the motion of the assessee who is aggrieved by the order of the Revenue Authorities, we are of opinion that the assessee's Pleader ought to be heard first.

This case came on for hearing on the merits on the 2nd and 3rd September 1919.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar and M. Subbaraya Aiyar, for the Assessee.—What is liable to be assessed under the Act is income which "accrues or arises or is received in British India or is deemed to so accrue, etc"—section 3. In this case, the hundi business being carried on outside British India, any income in the nature of interest, etc., "accrues, etc.," only outside British India. That there is such a distinction is clear from section 6 (2). There is nothing in the Act which would go to show that by exercise of control such income could be deemed "to accrue, etc., in British India." The word 'accrue' means grow or arise' See Wharton's Law Lexicon, Stroud's Judicial Dictionary, Murray's Century Dictionary. Residence of the person to whom the income accrues is not the criterion but the place where it accrues. See sections 31 and 33 referring to non resident foreigners. The English Law expressly makes "carrying on business" the criterion. Under it the question of control would certainly be material. Cf. 5 and 6 Vict Chap. 35, 16 and 17 Vict. Chap. 34, 4 and 5 Geo. V, Chap. 10. See also 8 and 9 Geo. V, Chap 40, Schedule D. See also Colquhoun v. Brooks (1). The word 'accrue' has been construed in Colquhoun v. Brooks (2). The Newzealand Act is similar in terms to the Indian Act, the words being "income derived from and received in Newzealand", and has been construed in Lovell & Christmas, Limited v. Commissioner of Taxes (3) and Commissioner of Taxes for Newzealand v. Eastern Extention Australasia and China Telegraph Company Limited (4). Under the Indian Act of 1886 (Act II of 1886) professional fees earned in Native States by British Indian subjects were not chargeable. But now that is stated specifically in section 10 (3). The present Act, therefore, does not include income earned outside British India unless specifically included.

Section 3 makes no reference to the person to whom the income "accrues, etc." "Accrue to a person" is a phrase which finds no place in the Act. It is the place where the income accrues, etc., that alone is material: See also the previous practice of the Board of Revenue in the Madras Income-Tax Manual, pages 63, 64, 65, 82 (and other proceedings). If that practice had been altered by the Act of 1918, there should have been express provision therefor. Past practice is a sure guide in such cases. See Oriental Bank Corporation v. Wright (5), Mathura Mohan Saha v. Ramkumar Saha (6).

A debt has its situs at the place where the debtor resides and not where the creditor lives, Rex v. Lovitt (7), as the assets are at the former place.

The Hon'ble the Advocate-General, for the Board of Revenue.— As a matter of fact there is nothing like past practice in the present case. Even under the old Act, such assessments have been made at least from 1915 onwards and been submitted to.

Further, past practice can never be a guide to the interpretation of an enactment passed much later, especially when such practice is the practice of the executive Government which can never have the force of judicial decisions. See Trustees of the Clyde Navigation v. Laird (8).

The words "accrue," "arise," etc., are merely descriptive of a right to receive. Colquhoun v. Brooks (1). See also Colquhoun v. Brooks (2), Mitchell v. Egyptian Hotels Limited (9).

The assessee in the present case is the sole owner of the business in question. So, whatever the place of such business, the assessee, who is a permanent resident of British India, has a right to receive the income, accruing from such business, in British India. Further, the business is carried on by an agent appointed in British India, so that the assessee has a right of suit in British India in respect of the agency dealings.

The income cannot be said to accrue to the agent but only to the principal. The principle is applied in section 31 and to a non-resident foreigner in section 33. In the present case, the principal is resident in British India, and so the income accrues in British India. Section 9 of the Income-Tax Act, 1918, expressly says that "tax shall be payable" "in respect of the profits of any business carried on" by the assessee. "Carrying on business" comprises various operations, one of which is control or supervision. It is 'carrying on business' within the meaning of the Act if the sole owner of a business controls it from British India.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Issuing general instructions is not the same thing as controlling.]

The instructions comprise the outline of the work to be done by the agent. The agent is thereby restricted. That is control, though it may not be efficient or complete control. That is also found in the reference.

ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG C. J.—How do you reconcile section 3 and section 9?]

The actual conduct of the business may be outside British India but so far as the assessee is concerned, he controls the business from British India and has a right to receive the income in British India.

The Indian Act is based on the English Act and there is no difference in substance. San Paulo (Brazilian) Railway Co. Ltd. v. Carter (10), Commissioners for Special Purposes of Income Tax v. Pemsel (11), Mitchell v. Egyptian Hotels Limited (9), Colquhoun v. Brooks (2).

Mr. A Krishnaswami Aiyar, in reply.— The mere right to interfere is not control. Interference in the actual conduct of the business is necessary.

A mere right to receive is not what is specified in section 3. It is actual receipt. See also Yewens v. Noakes (12). See also Beal on Legal Interpretations, 2nd Edition, page 369.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J. - This is a case stated by the Board of Revenue, under section 51 of the Income Tax Act, VII of 1918, in which the question involved is whether the assessee, a Nattukottai Chetti, who is the proprietor of a money-lending business carried on on his behalf by his agents in various places including Saigon, Sodac and Khando situated in French Cochin China, is liable to be taxed, under the provisions of this Act, in respect of the income of the business, though not received in British India.

The learned Advocate-General on behalf of the Crown has based his contention on two grounds; firstly, that the income in question accrued or arose to the assessee in British India inasmuch as he was entitled to call upon his agents to pay the income to him in British India, and, secondly, that, upon the case stated by the Board, the business the income of which is sought to be taxed must be held to have been carried on in British India, and, therefore, the income of that business is taxable.

It will be convenient to dispose of the last contention first. The facts in this connection as submitted are as follows:— The entire business operations producing the income are conducted at the places above mentioned outside British India by agents appointed for fixed periods, who use their own discretion in lending money to customers. The only part taken by the proprietor in connection with the business is to acquaint himself with the state of the business abroad and occasionally to issue general instructions. It is impossible for us, on these facts, to hold that the business is one carried on in British India. The learned Advocate-General cited several English rulings in support of his arguments, but as, pointed out by Lord Halsbury in San Paulo (Brazilan) Railway Co. Ld. v. Carter (10) [see also per Lord Loreburn in De Beers Consolidated Mines, Limited v. Howe (13)], it is a question of fact where the trade is carried on; at all events it is an inference to be drawn from the facts and circumstances of each case. In that case the railway in Brazil, the earnings of which were sought to be assessed, was owned by a company whose registered office was in England; the business of the company was managed by the directors in England; the directors purchased in England and sent out to Brazil the materials and plant necessary for the purposes of the Railway; and the accounts were kept and the balance sheet and reports were made out in London where also the meetings were held, and all dividends were declared and paid. On those facts, the learned Lords held that the trade was carried on in England and was, therefore, assessable, under the first case of Schedule D of 5 and 6 Vict. C. 35, section 100. The business here is that of money-lending and the mode of carrying it on is left entirely to the discretion of the agents in the places where the lending operations are conducted. The mere issuing of general instructions occasionally by the proprietor in British India and the fact of his being supplied with information from time to time as to the state of the business would not at all bring the case within the purview of the ruling referred to. As in no sense, in my opinion, could the business in this case be said to be managed and controlled by the proprietor in British India, the statement of Lord Loreburn in De Beers Consolidated Mines, Limited v. Howe (13) "that the real business is carried on where the central management and control actually abides" has no application. On the other hand, the observations of the Privy Council in Lovell & Christmas Limited v. Commissioner of Taxes (3) apply rather closely to the facts of the case. Their Lordships observe: "One rule is easily deducible from the decided cases. The trade or business in question in such cases ordinarily consists in making certain classes of contracts and in carrying those contracts into operation with a view to profit; and the rule seems to be that where such contracts, forming as they do the essence of the business or trade, are habitually made, there a trade or business is carrried on within the meaning of the Income Tax Acts, so as to render the profits liable to income-tax." It is, therefore, unnecessary to express an opinion on the question whether the income of a business controlled and managed by a person residing in British India, although the actual operations giving rise to the income are carried on, as in this case outside British India, would be assessable to income tax.

At one time the Advocate-General seemed even to argue that it is section 9 (1) by which the tax payable on account of income derived from business is to be determined. All that it says is that "the tax shall be payable by the assessee under the head 'Income derived from business' in respect of the profits of any business carried on by him," and the rest of the section deals with the mode in which such profits shall be computed. If section 9 (1) be taken to furnish the whole test, then section 3 (1) would have to be excluded from consideration in dealing with the income derived from business. But the Advocate-General was not really prepared to go so far; at any rate, there can be no doubt that section 9 (1) must be read along with section 3 (1) and that it is the latter that lays down the test to be applied in determining all incomes assessable to the tax, including income derived from business. If a certain income derived from business cannot be said to accrue or arise or to be received in British India, that income would not be assessable by virtue of anything contained in section 9. In fact, the main argument in this connection has been that the income of a business, which is managed and controlled by the proprietor in British India, accrues or arises in British India within the intendment of law and, because it so accrues or arises, it is taxable.

The first part of the argument does not really present any difficulty, for the language of section 3 seems to be unambiguous. The tax is leviable with reference to the place where the income accrues or arises or is received, and not with reference to the residence of the person who is entitled to the income. This seems to be the entire scheme of the Act and sections 31 and 32 would appear to be illustrations of that principle. Whatever meaning be attached to the words 'accrues' or 'arises' such as, 'grows' or 'becomes due or payable,' it is impossible to hold that the income in this case could be said to have accrued or arisen in British India. If loans are made and the borrowers reside outside British India and if accounts are adjusted, the moneys lent are realized with profit or are capable of being realized and the profits are periodically ascertained and dealt with outside British India, it is impossible to hold that the income of such business accrued or arose in British India.

A number of English decisions were discussed before us but it is unnecessary to deal with them in any detail, because the English Statute under consideration in those cases differs in many material respects from the Indian Act. In the English Statute the place of residence of a person is a basis of assessment but is not so, as pointed out above, in Act VII of 1918. The case of Colquhoun v. Brooks (1) [in the Court of Appeal and 14 App. Cas. p. 493 Colquhoun v. Brooks (2) in the House of Lords] does not lay down any principle of construction which can be of use in this case.

Then the learned Advocate-General at one stage of his argument seemed to contend that the income sought to be assessed should be deemed to accrue or arise or to be received in British India under the provisions of this Act, but this argument is clearly untenable. In the first place, this phrase refers to cases set out in the Act itself [see for instance section 6 (2), section 8], and none of them have any application to the case under consideration, and in the second place, as I have shown, there is no general rule of law by virtue of which the income sought to be assessed could be said to accrue or arise in British India.

If we look at the history of this enactment, the case sought to be made on behalf of the Crown appears to be still more untenable. The provision of Act VII of 1918, so far as the present question is concerned, is practically in the same words as that of the Income Tax Act of 1886. There the word 'income' used in the Act is defined as "income and profits accruing and arising or received in British India", and the present Act says that it shall apply to "all income if it accrues or arises or is received in British India." Whether there is any difference intended at all between the phrase "accrues and arises" and the phrase "accrues or arises," it could not reasonably be said that there has been any such change as to affect the question we are dealing with. The Act VI of 1886 was in force for more than thirty years before the present Income Tax Act was enacted, and the Advocate-General himself has informed us that, at least before 1915 or 1916 when he was consulted with respect to certain cases of a nature similar to this, the general practice of the Revenue Department was not to assess income of business carried on outside British India but the proprietor or proprietors of which resided in British India. We are justified in assuming that the Legislature was aware of this practice, and if with that knowledge they repeated in the new enactment the same words on which the practice of the Government was founded, it gives rise to the presumption that they did not want to assess such incomes. If the Legislature intended to tax these incomes and it would have been a very substantial source of public revenue, they could have easily said, as in the English Statute, that income accruing to a person in British India from any business wherever carried on is liable to be assessed.

I would hold, therefore, that the income of the business under reference is not liable to be assessed under the provisions of Act VII of 1918.

OLDFIELD, J.—The question referred is of considerable importance. But the considerations, which are really material, can be stated shortly.

Respondent has in the French territory of Saigon a money-lending business conducted by an agent, and (according to the statement in his petition, which is adopted in the case submitted to us) keeps himself acquainted with its progress and occasionally issues general instructions. He, however, resides in this Presidency and receives no income from Saigon. On these facts is he liable for tax on the profits of this business or, as he contends, will he be so, only if and when the profits are remitted to him here?

I agree with the learned Chief Justice that the answer to the first of these questions must be in the negative; and to justify that conclusion I refer to the scheme of the Income Tax Act of 1918, under which the case has to be decided. Section 3 (1) of that Act runs, "save as hereinafter provided this Act shall apply to all income from whatever source it is derived, if it accrues or arises or is received in British India or is under the provisions of the act deemed to accrue or arise or to be received in British India." After sections 3 (2) and 4 which specify certain general exclusions not at present material, there is the charging section, section 5, in which six classes of income are enumerated with the statement that, save as thereinafter provided, they shall be chargeable in the manner thereinafter appearing; and the ensuing sections 6 to 11 specify the manner, in which each class is to be assessed, each beginning "The tax shall be payable by an assessee under the head—", and then one of the six classes in section 5 is specified and the manner of assessment appropriate to it is described. Of the remaining provisions only sections 7, 10 (3), 31 and 33 have been relied on and to them I return. The point is at present that section 3 (1) affords a comprehensive definition of income for the purpose of the Act and that this definition is to be regarded as controlling, not as enlarged by, the language subsequently used in classifying the different descriptions of such income and prescribing the method of assessment for each.

This is important, because the main argument for the Crown is that the description of one such class in section 9 "income derived from business" and the direction to assess such income on "the profits of any business carried on by" the assessee are either supplementary to or can be substituted for the definition of income in section 3(1); and that the carrying on of the business in British India, which, for the purpose of argument, may be regarded as established, is sufficient to render respondent chargeable. For the reasons given I am unable to accept that construction and I, therefore, turn to the distinct line of argument also attempted, that income accrued to respondent here with direct and exclusive reference to the wording of section 33 (2), because in the alternative he has carried on here the business in which the income originated, or he was here when his right to the income in his agent's hands elsewhere became enforceable. That argument is not in my opinion tenable in either of these forms with reference to any legitimate interpretation of the word "accrue" or to the provisions of the Act, which have also been relied on.

The primary meaning given for the word in the Oxford Dictionary is "to arise or spring as natural growth or result;" in Webster's Dictionary, "to come by way of increase", and in Wharton's Law Lexicon "to grow to or arise." These, the only authorities referred to, show that the origin of the thing, which accrues, in the exertions of some person or otherwise, is not an essential element in the definition of the word "accrue" and cannot affect its application. This is fatal to the attempt made in the first form of the argument to identify the place of accrual referred to in section 3 (1) with the place, in which such exertions, in the present case by carrying on business, have taken place. I, however, refer at once to sections 10 (3), 31 and 33 of the Act, in the light of which it is contended that section 3 (1) should be construed. It might be sufficient to say that the first, in which a very definite exception is specified, and the others, occurring in a chapter headed "Liability in special cases," cannot be invoked as exemplifying any general principle or controlling a general definition. But in fact the sole similarity between the cases dealt with in these provisions and the case before us is that all relate to profits earned where they are not enjoyed. The special provision in section 10 (3) for liability to assessment in British India of professional fees, which a resident there has received elsewhere, can be referred to no general foundation and is merely the recognition of a presumption of law that the earnings of a resident in British India will be brought there for enjoyment, whilst sections 31 and 33 (of which the former statedly deals only with income chargeable under the Act) are easily intelligible provisions for the liability to the tax of the person, through whose hands in one capacity or another the profits in question will pass in British India and whom, therefore, the Crown can reach in order to collect it. It may, on the other hand, be observed that the existence of special and explicit provision in section 10 (3) for the taxation of one kind of income not received in British India is strong reason for refusing to hold others liable by implication. The argument of the learned Advocate General in its first form is accordingly unsustainable with reference either to the significance of the word "accrue" or to any construction of section 3 (1) with reference to other parts of the Act; and it must be rejected.

His argument in its second form derives at first sight some support from the secondary meanings of "accrue" given in the Century Dictionary as used in law for "to become a present and enforceable right" and in Bouvier's Law Lexicon as "to become a present right of demand," the suggestion being that respondent's profits in Saigon accrued to him in British India, when, being in the latter place, he had a right to demand them of his agent in the former; and to show that income is regarded in the Act as accruing before it is received and when there is only a right to receive it, reference has been made to the use of the word "receivable" in section 7. There is, however, a short answer to this. Firstly, this meaning of "accrue" is excluded by the context in section 3 (1). For it is not the right to demand the profits which it is proposed to tax, but the profits themselves. And, secondly, if the word "receivable" in section 7 is interpreted in the light of the provision in section 15 (3) for the method of payment of the tax on interest on securities, the description of income with which section 7 deals, its use will be seen to involve recognition, not of any kind of income as existing independently of and before its receipt, but of income, to which liability for the tax attaches at the moment of its receipt, when the tax is to be deducted by the person responsible for its disbursement.

Some attempt has been made to support this argument by reference to English decisions. But it is useless to deal with them at length in view of the material differences between the wording of the Act before us and that of the English Statute in question in Colquhoun v. Brooks (2) and of the New Zealand Statute in Commissioner of Taxes for New Zealand v. Eastern Extension Australiasia and China Telegraph Company Limited (4) and Lovell & Christmas, Limited v. Commissioner of Taxes (3). My conclusion is that respondent has not been shown to be liable for assessment; and that disposes of the main question raised by the case submitted to us.

It does not, however, dispose of the subsidiary question, which the learned Advocate-General has also argued, whether respondent carries on business in British India within the meaning of the Act. A decision on that question has been unnecessary, because even on the assumption that it should be answered in the affirmative, a conclusion in favour of respondent's liability cannot be reached. If we had had to decide it, we should have had to call for much more definite information as to the facts than we have been given; and I am constrained to express my doubts whether a question, which is so largely one of fact with reference to the method of carrying on the business of a particular assessee, is in any substantial degree one with reference to the interpretation of the Act, which we can deal with to advantage under section 51.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The undisputed facts are these. The principal (he is a minor) resides in Kanadugathan in the Madura District. He carries on the business of money lending in and out of British India. Some of the places are within the British Empire, though outside British India, others are in foreign territory subject to the rule of France, Holland, etc. The trade in question is in Saigon, which is outside the Empire. The point of agreement in all these businesses is that they are owned by a principal residing in British India and are worked by agents residing outside. On these facts the question for our opinion is whether the income from the trade in Saigon is assessable to income tax in British India. It is assumed and not disputed that that income has not been transmitted to the principal in India.

The question has been very elaborately argued. I shall in the main content myself with an examination of the Statute Law, because case-law is not likely to help us much. Before doing that, I wish to draw attention to some well-recognised principles bearing on the theory of legislation regarding income-tax. It is pointed out in Bar's International Law that "it is the principle of domicile that regulates the levy of income tax." It is said again :—"This is certainly the rule in most of the systems and that it should be so is perhaps to some extent accounted for by the fact that attempts to levy and to collect income-tax in a foreign country would very frequently encounter insurmountable difficulties." The same principle has been a little more clearly stated in Wharton's Conflict of Laws, Volume I, section 80 (a). That learned author says :—"The power of taxation of any state is, of necessity, limited to persons, property or business within its territorial jurisdiction." He further on states that "the principle is so fundamental that it has been declared that an act of state legislature in violation thereof would be as much a nullity as if in conflict with the most explicit constitutional inhibition. The situs of personal property for the purposes of taxation is, therefore, of the utmost importance in determining the limitations of the taxing power and the principles which should control the exercise of that power." He also refers to another maxim 'Mobilia sequuntur personam', and concludes that Legislatures should adopt either the one or the other and that the comity of nations can be preserved only if there is a clear understanding on this question. The English Income Tax Acts appear to have been based on the first of these principles. Lord Herschell in Colquhoun v. Brooks (2) says: "The Income Tax Acts, however, themselves impose a territorial limit; either that from which the taxable income is derived must be situate in the United Kingdom or the person whose income is to be taxed must be resident there." The same principle is traceable in the provisions of the Indian Income Tax Act. There is no reason for imputing to the Indian Legislature an intention to depart from the principle which has been so well recognised in England. One other observation preliminary to the examination of the sections may be made and that relates to the rule of construction of all income-tax enactments. In Partington v. Attorney-General (14) Lord Cairns stated the rule thus:—"As I understand the principle of all fiscal legislation, it is this. If the person sought to be taxed comes within the letter of the law he must be taxed, however great the hardship may appear to the judicial mind to be. On the other hand, if the Crown, seeking to recover the tax cannot bring the subject within the letter of the law the subject is free, however apparently within the spirit of the law the case might otherwise appear to be. In other words, if there be admissible, in any Statute, what is called an equitable construction, certainly such a construction is not admissible in a taxing Statute where you should simply adhere to the words of the Statute." In Coltness Iron Company v. Black (15) Lord Blackburn stated the same rule somewhat differently. The noble Lord said: "No tax can be imposed on the subject without words in an Act of Parliament clearly showing an intention to lay a burden on him. But when that intention is sufficiently shown, it is not open to speculate on what would be the fairest and most equitable mode of levying that tax." Bearing the above two considerations in mind, the one which is a guide to the principle of legislation and the other which is a guide to the construction of the language of the Statute, I shall proceed to examine the sections of Act VII of 1918 and see whether the contention of the Board of Revenue is sustainable.

It was not seriously disputed by the learned Advocate-General that section 3, clause (1), is the governing section in regard to income tax. The scheme of the Act seems to be this. There is first a general provision as to the locale of the income which is to be taxed. That is contained in section 3, clause (1). There are two parts of that clause. The first part deals with income actually accruing or arising or received in British India. The second introduces a fiction by which certain incomes are deemed to have accrued, arisen or received in British India. The same section in clause (2) gives various classes of incomes exempted from the payment of tax. Section 4 exempts agricultural income. In section 5 an enumeration of the classes of income referred to in section 3, clause (1), is made. Six categories are mentioned. From section 6 up to section 11 the mode of assessing income from the various heads tabled in section 5 is elaborated. The case we are dealing with comes under section 9, to which I shall advert later on. Sections 12 to 14 deal with the exemptions of a peculiar character. These sections exhaust Chapter I. Chapter II deals with the deductions of assessment with which we are not concerned. Chapter III deals with the procedure for what is known as summary assessment, with respect to a particular class of income. Then comes Chapter IV which was much commented upon during the argument. The scheme of this part of the Act is to amplify the principle stated in section 3, clause (1). It is intended to affect two classes of persons —persons who are not sui juris but who are resident in British India and carry on business through an agent or guardian of the Court of Wards and persons sui juris who are not resident in British India but who conduct their business in British India through an agent. This is really another illustration of the second clause of section 3 (1). It states a notional rule of law, the object aimed at being that the owner of the income should not escape liability either because he is not sui juris or because he is not a resident in British India, provided he receives the benefit of transactions in British India through somebody who represents him. The other chapters of the Act are not material and I shall not deal with them.

There is one section, however, on which a preliminary argument was addressed to us and it is as well that I should say a word about it.

The reference was made under section 51 to the High Court. It was not disputed that the reference was rendered necessary by the request of the assessee that in case the Board of Revenue did not agree with his view of the case, the matter should be placed before the High Court for their opinion. The learned Advocate-General contended that the Board of Revenue should have the right to begin the argument on the reference. Mr. Krishnaswamy Aiyar contended that his client, the assessee, was really in the position of the plaintiff and that he was entitled to begin. In my opinion the contention of the learned Vakil for the assessee is right. It is his case that was referred and it was at his instance that the reference was made. It is he that challenged the action of the Board, and although the letter has come from the Board of Revenue, it is as if he had preferred an appeal to the High Court against the conclusion of the Board of Revenue. In my opinion, therefore, the Advocate-General as representing the Board was not entitled to be heard first. But this is only by the way. I now come back to the discussion of the merits of the respective contentions.

If my analysis of the Act is right, it follows that our answer must depend upon the meaning we attach to the words, 'to all income from whatever source it is derived if it accrues or arises or is received in British India.' Reading both parts of section 3 (1) together, the income should either actually or notionally accrue, arise or be received in British India. Various definitions of the words "accrues or arises" were placed before us. In Murray's Oxford Dictionary the words "accrues" and "arises" are regarded as synonymous. In the Century Dictionary the word accrue is defined to mean "to become a present or enforceable right to demand." Stroud defines "arising in the United Kingdom" as "coming into the person's hands in the United Kingdom" —To my mind, all these definitions contemplate actual receipt of income, and not an income which may at any future time pass into the hands of the person resident in British India. In a given year a particular sum of money may be remitted from the foreign parts; that income would be taxable. But if that is retained in the hands of the agent for adjustment in the foreign country or for further employment there, can it be said that the income has accrued to the principal in British India? The learned Advocate-General argued that the second part of the section 3(1) made it clear that the income in the hands of the agent is income in the hands of the principal and he referred to sections 31 and 33 for this proposition. It seems to me that these two sections are inconsistent with the contention advanced. I have already referred to the nature of these two sections. Now I shall examine section 33, on which so much stress was laid by the Advocate-General, once again. There are two parts of it. One relates to "profits or gains accruing or arising to such a person whether directly or indirectly through or from any business connection in British India;" (2) and the other to what "shall be deemed to be income accruing or arising within British India." The object of this section, as I understand it, is to observe the comity of nations, which directs that all nations in enacting fiscal laws should as far as possible put a territorial limit to the operation of the fiscal enactment. In other words they should only tax property in situ. It is with that object, this section enacts that the income which is transmittable to a person outside British India shall be deemed to be income arising in British India if the non-resident foreigner has business in British India and transacts that business in British India through an agent. The object is secured by taxing the income made in British India before it leaves British India. Whether this theory may not result in the imposition of double tax where the principal resides within the Empire, but outside British India, it is unnecessary for us to consider: also whether it would not conflict with the laws of other nations where the principal resides in a foreign territory. What is material is, that this section introduces a fiction of law as regards non-resident principal, in order that income due to him may be regarded as accruing or arising in British India. A significant omission by the Legislature is almost fatal to the contention of the learned Advocate-General. Whereas the income received by an agent in British India on behalf of a foreign principal has been notionally described as income accruing or arising in British India, the converse, namely, of income belonging to a resident principal which has been received out of British India by an agent is not similarly brought under a legal fiction. The obvious principle which guided the Legislature was that the tax should be imposed only on what is actually received or made in British India. I must, therefore, hold that the learned Advocate-General's contention that the second clause of section 3 (1) affects the receipt of income by the agent in Saigon is not sustainable.

Then it was attempted to argue that section 9 is comprehensive enough and it should not be fettered by reference to section 3. I do not think this contention is admissible at all. I shall say only a few words on the meaning to be attached to the words "in any business carried on" in section 9. But even supposing that we come to the conclusion that the principal residing in Kanadakathan was carrying on business in Saigon, it will still have to be established that the income accrued or arose in British India, if it is to be taxed.

Now I shall deal with the contention put forward that the business was carried on in British India. The facts mentioned in the order of reference do not justify us in holding that the business in Saigon was controlled by the principal residing in Kanadakathan. As has been said in some cases, there are not facts which would enable us to hold that the brain was in Kanadakathan which directed the operations in Saigon. Mr. Krishnaswamy Aiyar drew our attention to the difference between business being carried and profits being received, as observed in San Paulo (Brazilian) Railway Co. Ltd. v. Carter (10). The language employed by some of the noble Lords in that case was very strongly relied on by the learned Advocate-General. The observations of Lord Davey, who subsequently explained the position in Commissioners of Taxation v. Kirk (16), do not support the view that by giving general instructions the business is carried on in the country from which these instructions issue. Moreover, the facts in De Beers Consolidated Mines, Limited v. Howe (13) and in Cesena Sulphur Company v. Nicholson (17) and in Mitchell v. Egyptian Hotels Limited (9) were different from the facts on which we have been asked to give our opinion. I do not, therefore, think any good will be served by discussing these cases. In my opinion the facts to which our attention has been drawn are not specific enough to enable us to say that the business was really carried on in British India. There is only one other remark that need be made. It was elicited in the course of the argument that until the year 1914 or 1915 no income-tax was levied in respect of foreign trades of principals residing in British India. The old Act of 1886 was repealed in 1918. So far about 30 years at least the executive Government in India did not levy income-tax upon business of this kind. Mr. Krishnaswamy Aiyar relied on this practice and quoted Commissioners for Special Purposes of Income Tax v. Pemsel(11) and Yewens v. Noakes (12) as enunciating that the practice under a repealed enactment can be looked into for construing the later enactment. Whatever may be the weight we may attach to it, it seems to me that Courts will not be acting wrongly in referring to the practice in construing the Act. However, I do not invoke the aid of this practice, as in my opinion there is nothing in the Act which on the face of it imposes a duty upon income of this kind. As I started by saying that unless the words are clear, a fiscal enactment should not be construed as imposing a tax by implication. For these reasons I am of opinion that the assessee is not taxable.

BY THE COURT.—We fix the assessee's Vakil's fee at Rs. 250; and his costs will be paid by Government within three months from this date.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL No. 52 OF 1917
IN SUIT No. 57 OF 1914.

Present:—Sir Lancelot Sanderson, KT., Chief Justice, and Justice Sir John Woodroffe, KT.

RAMENDRA NATH ROY—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

BRAJENDRA NATH DASS AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 99, 102—Sale of goods—Broker liable as principal, position of—Stoppage in transit, right of—Assignment by buyer, effect of.

A broker liable upon a principal contract both to the seller and the purchaser has a right to enforce the contract and is entitled to sue in respect thereof. His position by virtue of his personal liability to his sellers for the price is that of an unpaid vendor with a right of stoppage in transit conferred by section 99 of the Contract Act, but such right would be defeated if the buyer obtained the documents of title and delivered them to a second buyer who acted in good faith and gave valuable consideration for them, as such delivery would amount to an assignment under section 102 of the Contract Act [p. 987, col. 1; p. 988, col. 1.]

For Facts see 41 Ind. Cas. 944; 45 C. 111.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—I have read the judgment of my learned brother with which I agree and I have little to add.

In my judgment the plaintiff was not a mere broker in the transaction in question.

The learned Judge who tried the case referred to a usage as being so well known that the Courts might almost take judicial notice of it; and further said it was admitted by both sides, but he did not find exactly what the usage is.

I think, however, that the real position of the plaintiff was that he was acting as a broker and paid by brokerage, but liable to both the seller and the purchaser as on a "principal" contract, and that, consequently, the plaintiff had a corresponding right to enforce the contract and was entitled to sue in respect thereof.

The learned Counsel for Messrs. Cartwright and Co. contended that this right to enforce the contract would not include the right of stoppage in transit, as that right belongs to an unpaid vendor only under section 99 of the Contract Act of 1872. In my judgment, having regard to the facts of this case, and especially the fact that the plaintiff was personally liable to his sellers for the price of the goods, he was really in the position of an unpaid vendor, and that he had the right of stoppage conferred by the above-mentioned section.

In my judgment, there is no doubt the plaintiff appropriated the goods, represented by the documents which he handed to B. N. Dass, to the contract. On the 29th December 1913, when the plaintiff handed the documents to B. N. Dass he did so with the intention that B. N. Dass should deal with the goods, and, judging from the letter of the 28th December 1913, it must have been obvious that B. N. Dass was going to deal with the goods immediately. B. N. Dass did in fact deal with the goods on the 30th December 1913.

B. N. Dass assented to the appropriation by accepting the documents and dealing with and handing them to Messrs. Cartwright and Co. The alteration by B. N. Dass of the words "for payment" into "for examination" in the two receipts, dated the 29th December 1913, handed to him by the plaintiff and his letter of the 29th December 1913 to the plaintiff as to certain jute being booked "at owner's risk" were, in my judgment, merely for the purpose of gaining some time.

The fact that the plaintiff was paid by B. N. Dass Rs. 25,000 on the 3rd January 1914, on account, which was nearly half the total sum due in respect of all the goods, is material on the question of appropriation and assent thereto, and in my judgment there is no doubt that there was appropriation to the contract of the goods in question on the part of the plaintiff and assent on the part of B. N. Dass.

As to the question whether the appropriation was conditional upon B. N. Dass' promise to pay the price of the goods, I need add nothing to what my learned brother has said. But even assuming for the moment that the appropriation was conditional and was voidable by reason of the unfulfilled promise to pay, as urged on behalf of the plaintiff, he would have to prove that the circumstances under which B. N. Dass obtained possession of the documents, amounted to an offence on his part: section 108, Exception (3).

The plaintiff must prove the offence and show that B.N. Dass had a criminal intent at the time he made the alleged promise of payment, and, in my judgment, the plaintiff has not discharged the onus which lies upon him in that respect.

I do not think it has been established that the plaintiff received the cheque for Rs. 25,000 on the 30th December 1913, and that it was post dated the 3rd January 1914. There is, however, no doubt that the cheque was cashed on the 5th January 1914 in due course, and the payment of this large sum is a material fact in considering whether B. N. Dass was actuated by a criminal intent when he received the documents from the plaintiff.

There is a further difficulty in the way of the plaintiff, inasmuch as he seems by his evidence to have accepted the position of the sale by Dass to Cartwright and by Cartwright to the Mills, and his Solicitor's letters of the 10th January 1914 to Messrs. Cartwright and Co. and to B. N. Dass seem to me to be inconsistent with the position that the plaintiff was exercising his alleged right to avoid the contract.

As regards the transactions between B. N. Dass and Cartwright, the learned Judge thought that H. C. Guha was probably acting in collusion with B. N. Dass but he was not satisfied that H. C. Guha was a party to any fraud by B. N. Dass upon the plaintiff.

If there was collusion between H. C. Guha and B. N. Dass, in my judgment, it was for the purpose of passing off the goods, represented by the documents, in performance of contracts with the Mills which had already been fulfilled, or for which the goods were not suitable, and thereby loss was caused to Messrs. Cartwright and Co., but I am by no means satisfied that H. C. Guha was in any way a party to the alleged fraud on the part of B. N. Dass upon the plaintiff.

In this Court the alleged right to stop in transit was insisted upon with respect to the goods included in bills of lading 13, 20, 29, 32 and railway receipt No. 9 only.

As regards railway receipt No. 9. The consignees in the railway receipt were the Lansdowne Jute Mills Co., and the evidence of Mr. Robertson, who was in Bird and Co. and who was appointed Receiver by the Court, was to the effect that the Lansdowne Mills got delivery of the goods on the 2nd January 1914, and the notice of stoppage in transit was not given until the 10th January 1914, so that it appears that in the case of these goods the transit was at an end before the notice of stoppage was given.

As regards the four bills of lading, I have already held that the plaintiff's position was such as entitled him as unpaid vendor to stop the goods in transit, and I think that the evidence shows that on the 10th January 1914 B. N. Dass was insolvent. The question arises whether the right of stoppage ceased by reason of the buyer, B. N. Dass, having obtained the bills of lading and having assigned them to a second buyer who was acting in good faith and who gave valuable consideration for them under section 102 of the Contract Act.

The point which was strenuously argued on behalf of the plaintiff was that B. N. Dass, the buyer, had not "assigned" the bills of lading within the meaning of section 102. On this part of the case no point was raised as regards the facts relating to the disposal of the goods, as found in the learned Judge's judgment, except as to the use of the word "excess" which, it was said, was not a correct way of describing the delivery; but this does not affect the question now under consideration, and I agree with the finding that there was no want of good faith either on the part of Cartwrights or on the part of the Mills and that valuable consideration was given. Reference was made to section 101 and it was then contended that in order to come within section 102, the first buyer must be the consignee named in the bill of lading, and that as the bills of lading in this case were made out in the names of the Mills or their Manager or Agents, and as B. N. Dass merely handed the documents to Cartwrights to fulfil supposed running contracts with the Mills, there was no assignment within the meaning of the section.

It was contended that the only way in which the plaintiff's right to stop in transit could be defeated was by an "assignment," which meant an endorsement by the person in whose name the bills of lading were out and who was entitled to the control of the goods. It was urged that B. N. Dass was not entitled to the control of the goods, as the bills of lading were in the names of the ultimate buyers, viz., the Mills; that B. N. Dass could not assign by merely handing the bills of lading to the Mills or to Cartwrights on behalf of the Mills. It was admitted that if the bills of lading had been made out in the name of B. N. Dass and he had endorsed them to the Mills or to Cartwrights on behalf of the Mills, the plaintiff's right to stop in transit would have been at an end; but it was urged that as the bills of lading in this case were made out in the name of the Mills the right of stoppage in transit was not defeated, even though the handing over of the bills of lading by B. N. Dass to Cartwrights on behalf of the Mills would pass the property and though the result as regards the passing of the property would be the same as if the bills had been in B. N. Dass' name and he had endorsed them.

The bills of lading were made out in the name of the Mills at the request of B. N. Dass and on the facts of the case it must be taken, in my judgment, that the plaintiff handed over the bills of lading to B. N. Dass with the intention that he should sell and deliver the goods to the Mills, and all that was necessary for completing the delivery would be the handing over of the bills of lading to the Mills.

In my judgment, if we were to adopt the plaintiff's contention, we should be putting too narrow a construction upon the section, and under the circumstances of this case, the delivery of the bills of lading to Messrs. Cartwrights and Co. amounted to an assignment of the bills of lading within the meaning of the section.

For the above reasons, I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

WOODROFFE, J.—The plaintiff is the son of a wealthy father, which seems to have been his misfortune, for it enabled him to start business as a broker before he had acquired the necessary experience. He made one venture by way of the transaction in suit and we are told that, owing to its unhappy results, it will be the last He says he sold goods to a man named B. N. Dass. He then entrusted to the latter the documents of title before getting payment. Dass made them over to a third party (Messrs. Cartwright say they took them in good faith in supposed discharge of running contracts with the defendant Mills) and got the value of the goods. Fortunately for the plaintiff, the sum of Rs. 25,000, which represents nearly half the value of the goods, was paid by B. N. Dass. He then, however, went insolvent and the plaintiff now wants to remedy the position brought about by his imprudence in making over documents of title to goods without getting payment and in thus enabling the defendant B. N. Dass to deal, as regards the goods, with third parties. By this suit he is seeking to make up for the loss which he has suffered through his own act.

A large number of questions have been argued, but substantially the case turns upon the question whether the documents were procured from the plaintiff by the fraud of B. N. Dass and whether the plaintiff has successfully protected himself from his act in handing over the documents by the exercise of a right of stoppage in transit.

A preliminary question arises as to the title on which the plaintiff sues. His Counsel contends that he was a principal in the contract with B. N. Dass and this seems to be the basis on which the plaint is drawn. The respondents who appear (that is the defendants other than B. N. Dass, who seems to have disappeared) contend that the plaintiff was a mere broker. The learned Judge has found that the contract was a principal contract; that is according to an usage, which he holds was both admitted and proved, a broker in a contract for an undisclosed principal is liable upon and may sue on the contract. Though a broker, he has thus, it is said, the liabilities and rights of a principal. The documents and facts are not free from confusion. But on the issues and findings, I have no difficulty in arriving at a conclusion on this point. If the plaintiff was a mere broker he cannot sue or be sued and the suit should have been dismissed on that ground. But there is no issue which in my opinion directly and necessarily raises this point, as regards which something may have been said during the trial. The learned Judge has held that the usage mentioned was admitted by both sides. The assumption of such an usage is not relevant if the plaintiff was a mere broker. Upon these considerations and facts of the case, I hold that the plaintiff was neither a mere broker nor a principal as contended for by the respondents and appellant respectively, but was a broker liable upon what is called a principal contract. I should here say that Mr. S. R. Das, who argued the case for the appellant, did so on the alternative assumption that he was either principal or a broker liable on a principal contract, and claimed that he was entitled to a decree on either assumption. Whether, however, he was one or the other has a bearing upon two questions in this suit, namely, the time when, and the person by whom, appropriation of goods to the contract was made and the question whether a broker liable upon a principal contract is entitled to exercise the rights of a vendor against goods in transit.

Then as to the question of appropriation. Did the property in the goods pass? This depends on whether there was an appropriation by one party, assented to by the other, through which the agreement or contract became executed. In my opinion the plaintiff could and did appropriate. There is, it is to be observed, no question of any other goods. The only goods which the plaintiff at any time sold were these goods. These had been selected, shipped and railed and consigned to the Mills to which B. N. Dass asked that they might be sent. The plaintiff's case is that he had purchased these goods from the upcountry sellers for the express purpose of fulfilling the contract with B. N. Dass. The latter had asked that these goods should be consigned to the Mills. On the 29th December the documents of title were made over to the defendant B. N. Dass and were accepted and dealt with by him. There is no doubt that (apart from the question of a condition) the property in the goods passed at least on the 29th December. If the property in the goods passed, we are not concerned with the provisions of Exception (1) of section 108 of the Contract Act,

RAJENDRA NATH ROY v. BRAJENDRA NATH DASS.

The real question in this suit is, therefore, whether the appropriation by the plaintiff was conditional, namely, on a promise of payment as alleged in the plaint. If so and the condition was not fulfilled, there was no passing of the goods and the question of the applicability of Exception (1) above stated would have to be considered.

It is further contended that even if the property in the goods passed, it did so under a voidable contract procured by an offence and, therefore, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed under the provisions of Exception (3) of section 103 of the Contract Act. It is not alleged that the contract originally entered into was voidable, but that there was an agreement by way of conditional appropriation which was voidable and that the circumstances which rendered the contract voidable amounted to an offence. The question under this section is whether the alleged agreement was voidable as procured by an offence. It is denied that there was an offence ; and it is further said that the alleged voidable contract was upon the evidence (namely, the plaintiff's Attorney's entries and letters) treated as subsisting. It is not necessary to enquire into this, if in fact no fraud has been established. In fact this case principally turns on the question whether there was a fraudulent offence by B. N. Dass and whether the plaintiff was entitled to exercise, and did effectually exercise, a vendor's right of stoppage in transit. I will deal with the former first.

The offence charged is cheating, namely, that the defendant B. N. Dass made a false representation that he was in a position to pay and would pay, but he was not in such a position and never intended to pay. There was, it is said, a mere fraudulent pretence to get hold of the goods without paying for them Now, in the first place, it is to be noted, as affecting the whole of this part of the case, that the proof of what passed between the plaintiff and B. N. Dass on the 29th, when the alleged offence was committed, depends on the evidence of the plaintiff, and if this is not accepted, the case as to a fraudulent offence is not made out. But even if the account of what occurred on the 29th December is accepted, it becomes still necessary to enquire whether the facts proved show a criminal offence. It is, of course, possible that the defendant made a promise which was unfulfilled, and yet was not guilty of an offence. The learned Judge who tried the case has expressed himself as unable to accept the story which the plaintiff has told, considering it to be in several particulars at variance with contemporaneous documents. On the whole I see no sufficient reason to come to any other conclusion on grounds some of which I will mention. The evidence shows that the plaintiff was without the necessary business experience. After his return from England, where he was sent for a business training, without learning overmuch, he met the defendant B. N. Dass who, he said, had the general reputation of being honest and a gentleman. He says (and it is clear) that he trusted him. This venture in suit was his first and last. He says that his own sellers (who sold him goods to meet Dass' contract) gave him credit. In fact the bills of lading and railway receipts were made over to the plaintiff by his sellers without any payment whatever. Further, according to the plaintiff, there was an arrangement with his sellers on the evening of the 29th, according to which the plaintiff was to re-pay them gradually. This, it is contended, so far from supporting a case of promise of immediate payment, rather points to the conclusion that he was giving the same credit as he had asked for and obtained. At any rate it is argued that there was no special reason why the plaintiff should press for immediate payment. On the previous day B. N. Dass wrote to the plaintiff as follows:—

Calcutta, 28th December 1913.

" Dear Mr. Roy,

Herewith I am sending you three contract receipts. For God's sake kindly let me have the documents you have already got. You know fully that I want the documents not later than to morrow morning, but if I get them to day I might make out the Bill, etc, to-day or I shall be in terrible fix. If you so kindly send them to me to-morrow morning. Kindly treat this letter both urgent and important.

Yours sincerely

To

R. N. Roy. B. N. Dass."

This letter must have indicated to the plaintiff that he wanted the documents to raise money from his buyer. On the evening of the 29th, the plaintiff took two receipts for the bills of lading there mentioned, in one of which the jute is treated as delivered. When these receipts were tendered no demand seems to have been made for the money which, it is said, was to have been paid at 10 A. M. According to the plaintiff's evidence, B. N. Dass had to "sign or pay." Nothing is done until the 3rd January when a sum of Rs. 25,000, which is nearly half the value of the goods, was paid. This is an important circumstance to be considered in adjudging the question whether the man, who paid this sum on the third January, had some five days previously a criminal intention not to pay, though professing his readiness to do so to get hold of the documents. The suggestion of learned Counsel for the appellant that this was a kind of "blind" does not easily establish itself. Although Exhibit N (letter by the plaintiff's Attorneys) does allege that the bills of lading were obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation, nothing is said in this letter nor in Exhibit 33-A (an entry of the Attorneys' dated the 9th January) as to the voidability of the contract. In fact in his evidence the plaintiff says "yes", in answer to the question: "Then you accepted the position of the sale by Dass to Cartwright and to the Mills?" The Attorney's entry of the 10th January notes that Dass and Co. were called upon for payment of the balance of the amount due on a contract now said to be voidable. Similarly, on the 10th January 1914 the Attorneys wrote to B. N. Dass and Co., calling upon them to make immediate payment of the balance due to the plaintiff. Though some statements in Mr. Edward's letters are incorrect, I see no sufficient grounds for upholding the learned Judge's comments as regards his evidence, nor have the respondents relied on these. On the whole I am of opinion that no sufficient ground has been made out for coming to a different conclusion from that at which the learned Judge has arrived, on the question whether the documents were made over to Dass, under the circumstances alleged by the plaintiff. It is not necessary to hold, and I do not hold, that the plaintiff has said what he knows to be untrue on this matter. It is sufficient to say that the evidence of the plaintiff only is under the circumstances not enough. But even if it were enough to establish that there was an appropriation and handing over of the documents on a promise of payment, it would still have to be shown for the purposes of Exception (3) of section 103, Contract Act, that the facts alleged amounted to an offence. No doubt there are some unfavourable circumstances, such as the general financial position of Dass, and the dishonouring of his cheques on the 9th January, and his insolvent condition from that date. But it is difficult to hold that it has been established that Dass had a criminal intent when he made the alleged promise of payment to the plaintiff, seeing that he paid shortly thereafter the large sum of Rs. 25,000, or nearly half the price of the goods which he is said to have swindled out of the plaintiff. I hold that the alleged offence has not been made out.

The last issue is as to the alleged right of stoppage in transit. As regards some goods, the right cannot admittedly be claimed. The claim is made as regards bills of lading Nos. 13, 20, 32, 29 and railway receipt No. 9. As regards this last Mr. Robertson says that although the Mills bought from him as Receiver on the 6th March, the Mills actually got delivery on the 2nd January and it is thus submitted that as regards these goods the transit was at an end. As the learned Judge has held, section 102 of the Contract Act applies. The argument of the respondent has been that the stoppage in transit section does not apply, for it is said that the plaintiff was not a seller, but at the most a broker personally liable and with personal right of suit under the usage relating to what are called "principal contracts." The cases, however, establish that a liberal meaning should be given to the term "vendor", which includes any person standing in the position of a vendor The plaintiff paid a portion of the money he owed his sellers before the notice of stoppage was given and was liable in respect of the whole. I am of opinion, therefore, that a broker liable on a principal contract has authority to stop goods in transit.

If this were not so, a broker might be made liable and would yet be shorn of a right essential for his protection against a defaulting buyer Assuming this, however, in the appellant's favour, the question is whether the right of stoppage did not cease under the provisions of section 102 of the Contract Act. It is said that the buyer did not "assign" the bill of lading within the meaning of this section and that assignment does not mean merely "handing over." It is the fact that the documents were not endorsed. Neither, however, Dass nor Roy could endorse them. The documents, however, were such that the Mills, being consignees, were entitled to take delivery without further endorsement. The documents other than No. 9 were in fact made over to the Mills before the date of the notice of stoppage in transit and were handed over to them in pursuance of a supposed running contract. They were not at first accepted by Messrs. Birkmyre and Co., who, however, entered into a new contract, as regards the goods on a date also before the above-mentioned date. Unless we take a very narrow and technical view, all that was necessary in the present case was the transfer, in the sense of handing over these documents, though it is conceded that if the documents had been made over to some person other than the consignee on the bills, the case might have been otherwise. It was further contended for the respondent that the plaintiff was estopped from denying that Dass had no right to deal with the bills of lading. It is not necessary to discuss that as, in my opinion, the plaintiff has not established his right of stoppage in transit. The appeal, therefore, fails on all the grounds taken and should, in my opinion, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, para. 20—Arbitration and award—Arbitration, private—Award, bad in part, whether can be split up—Amendment of award, when permissible—Parties signing award, effect of.

When an award goes beyond the powers of the arbitrator, it is permissible to separate such portion of the award, and to maintain the remainder, if good [p. 993, col 2]

Ordinarily, an arbitrator after he has delivered his award is functus officio; but if the parties after the delivery of the award again make a reference asking for the re-consideration of a part of the award, and the arbitrator thereupon re-considers that part of his award and amends it accordingly, the amendment so made is within his powers. [p. 994, col. 2 p. 995, col 1]

An award of arbitrators derives its binding force as against the parties entirely from their previous submission, and their subsequent signature in token of consent in no way affects the character of the award It is neither more binding upon the parties when signed by them nor less binding when they do not sign it. It is binding in the former case, because it is the judgment of a tribunal to which the parties had unconditionally submitted before adjudication and not because they have subsequently acknowledged the justice of the decision [p. 995, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous appeal against the decree of the 2nd Additional District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, in Civil Suit No. 24 of 1907, decided on the 22nd of December 1917.

Mr. M. V. Joshi, for the Appellant.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under section 104, (1) (f) of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, from an order refusing to file an award in an arbitration without the intervention of the Court.

The application was made under section 525 of the Code of 1882 in 1907. It is a matter for regret that the case should have been pending for nearly twelve years.

It has been found, and it is no longer disputed before us, that all parties to the suit signed the agreement of reference, dated the 13th February 1907 (Exhibit P—2). The arbitrator made an award (Exhibit P—1) on the 22nd April 1907. On the 14th May 1907 a further agreement (Exhibit P—3) was signed by the parties and certain amendments were made in the award itself.

The parties to the suit are descendants of Puranmal, who founded two temples at Hyderabad and one at Pushkar in Ajmere. Three jagir villages were granted by His Highness the Nizam's Government, two of these Balgaon and Akoli are situated in Berar, and the third Pangam in the Hyderabad State. The Berar jagir villages are recorded as coming under Rule IV of the Berar Inam Rules. This shows that the revenues of these two villages were given for a charitable or religious object. There were disputes between the parties regarding the management and enjoyment of the temples and the jagir villages, and, it would appear, also regarding their joint ancestral family property, moveable and immoveable. The arbitrator has dealt with each class of dispute separately. The management has hitherto been in the hands of the contesting defendant Ramlal. The arbitrator has decided that the management should be with three persons representing the three branches of Puranmal's family. So far as the management of the temples and jagirs is concerned, the arbitrator has recorded an opinion which has been translated by the lower Court thus:—

"I consider it proper that after four years ... ... the management of the Mandirs may be entrusted to a public committee and all the immoveable and moveable property of Mandirs should be made over to that committee. I also consider this proper that the members of the three branches of the family of Paranmalji will appoint such committee; if all the members ... ... do not do so ... ... then any two members out of them shall appoint a committee. But if no one out of these members will appoint such a committee then I think it proper that the public in general will exert itself to appoint such a committee."

The parties are agreed, and the lower Court holds, that this clause meant to secure the rights of the public is ultra vires, inasmuch as the object of the reference was to settle which members of the family should have the management, and, as the lower Court points out, the parties did not intend to surrender their rights to a public body. This is one ground given by the lower Court for rejecting the award. The other ground is that by reason of the agreement made on the 14th May, the award has been superseded and the amendments made by the arbitrator in the award on that day were beyond his powers.

The first point for consideration is whether the hope expressed by the arbitrator that the temples and the jagirs should be handed over to the public makes the whole award bad. It is not disputed that this clause can be separated from the rest. The argument on behalf of the contesting respondent is that in summary proceedings under section 525 of the old Civil Procedure Code, corresponding to Schedule II, paragraph 20 of the new Code, the Court has no option but to reject an award, bad in part, even if the part is separable. In support of this it is contended that the use of the expression "the award" in paragraph 21, Schedule II precludes the Court from filing only a portion of it. It is, however, fully conceded that when an arbitration takes place through the Court, such separation of the portion which is beyond the powers of the arbitrator is permissible. A number of rulings have been cited in support of the respondent's contention, of which the following are under the new Code: Dinabandhu v. Chintamoni (1), Dhanpat Rai v. Kahn Devi (2).

These need not be examined in view of the recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Amir Begam v. Badr-ul-din Husain (3). At page 342* their Lordships say: "It is well recognised law that when a separable portion of an award is bad, the remainder of the award, if good, can be maintained." This was a case under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure, KISANCHANDRA v. RAMLAL.

1908. The first ground on which the lower Court has rejected the award is, therefore, untenable.

We next proceed to consider whether the award can be said to have been superseded by the agreement of the 14th May (Exhibit P—3). The only point on which the agreement may be said to supersede the award is in respect of the appointment of the public committee for the management of the temples and jagirs. If, as is the case of both parties, this part of the award was in excess of the powers of the arbitrator, an agreement superseding that part was a pure surplusage. In other respects the parties agree to act according to the decision of the arbitrator. The agreement further contains two clauses which are perfectly consistent with the award; namely, that each member of the family will be separately responsible for his separate debts and any decrees against him, and further that each member will be alone personally concerned with the profit and loss of his own separate business. We cannot see how this agreement can be said to supersede the award.

There is a substantial amendment made in a matter of detail in the award, for which the lower Court has rejected the award. We will return to this point after we have disposed of the respondent's arguments based upon, what he chooses to call, alterations in the award.

The arbitrator has been examined as a witness but his evidence given in Tamil has been very badly translated. It appears, however, from this evidence that Ramlal objected to a sentence in paragraph 14 of the award which he regarded as an imputation on his character. The arbitrator was willing to expunge the last sentence in that paragraph and proceeded to do so at the instance of Ramlal. The other parties then objected and hence the original sentence was allowed to remain and is to be found in the copy supplied to the parties. This sentence does not in any way affect the decision of the arbitrator. All that can be said is that there was an attempt to expunge a sentence which Ramlal considered objectionable but which the arbitrator eventually allowed to remain in view of the protest of the other parties.

In paragraphs 18 and 24 certain payments were directed to be made at Hyderabad. The words "At Hyderabad" were scored out. They were duly initialled in paragraph 24, but apparently through an oversight they were not initialled in paragraph 18. No question was put to the arbitrator regarding the erasure. We have not the slightest doubt that this was done before the award was signed. We wish to mention that we have inspected the original award and are perfectly satisfied that this is a frivolous objection.

In the penultimate sentence of paragraph 50 of the original award the word 'Sell' has been added and duly initialled. This must have been done before the award was delivered. Without the use of the word 'Sell' or some word indicating a transfer, the sentence becomes meaningless.

We now deal with the real alteration which has been made in the award. Originally Nathmal was to represent the junior branch of the family. At the request of the parties rotation amongst the members of the third branch was introduced by way of amendment. The lower Court on this point writes thus:—

"The authority of an arbitrator is at an end as soon as he has made the award. Any alteration which he may subsequently make will be nugatory and his act will be like a mere spoliation by a stranger: (Russell's Arbitration and Award, 9th Edition, page 114)."

The lower Court does not seem to have understood the circumstances under which the alterations came to be made. All parties to the reference desired that alteration to be made and the award was amended accordingly; each amendment being marginally signed by all the parties including Ramlal. Ordinarily, an arbitrator after he has delivered his award is functus officio. In the case of a private award neither the Hindu Law nor the Statute Law of British India requires a reference in writing. It is not suggested before us that the law is different in Hyderabad where the amendment took place. If parties after the delivery of the award again make a reference asking for the reconsideration of a part of the award and the arbitrator thereupon reconsiders that part of his award and amends it accordingly, the amendment so made is within his powers. The signature of the parties, read with the oral evidence in the case, clearly proves what in law would amount to a fresh reference on a particular point of detail dealt with in the award. We, therefore, come to the conclusion that the amendment is no ground for rejecting the award.

Various objections were taken to the award by the respondent Ramlal, and in a memo. of objections filed he disputes every finding recorded against him. His Counsel, however, has argued only the points which we are dealing with in this judgment.

It is contended that an award ceases to be an award and becomes a partition deed or a deed of conveyance or compromise by reason of the signature of the parties in token of acceptance. It is, therefore, contended that the document required registration. We think there is no force in this argument. The document is not and is not sought to be used as a conveyance but only as an award. We agree with Stevens, Judicial Commissioner, who holds :—

"An award of arbitrators derives its binding force as against the parties entirely from their previous submission, and their subsequent signature in token of consent in no way affects the character of the award. It is neither more binding upon the parties when signed by them nor less binding when they do not sign it. It is binding in the former case because it is the judgment of a tribunal to which the parties had unconditionally submitted before adjudication, and not because they have subsequently acknowledged the justice of the decision:" Jagannath v. Rambux (4).

The lower Court has held that the sanction of the Commissioner of Berar, who exercises the functions of the Advocate-General, was not necessary for a suit asking for the reliefs granted by the award. It seems that the jagirs are trust property or property burdened with a trust created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature. In paragraph 19 of its judgment the lower Court writes: "In such jagirs, the balance of income, after the expenses of maintenance of the religious institution are met from it, is the remuneration of the wahivatdar or manager." There is no evidence to this effect but it is probably the practice in most jagirs. Whether such practice is lawful or not can only be determined by a reference to the sanads. The sanads have not been produced, though they should be in the possession of the contesting defendant Ramlal. In our opinion, a suit to remedy a particular infringement of an individual private right in regard to such trust property does not come within the purview of section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. The parties as descendants of Puranmal, the founder of the temples, claimed a right to manage them together with the appurtenant jagirs. They say that the defendant was hitherto the managing member of the family and as such managed the endowment. A suit for joint management by all the members of the family of the founder will lie without the sanction of the Commissioner of Berar: Miya Vali Ulla v. Sayed Bava Santi Miya (5), Budree Das Mukim v. Ohooni Lal Johurry (6), Rama Das v. Hanumantha Row (7); see also Muhammad Abdul Majid Khan v. Ahmad Saeed Khan (8).

No doubt, any decision come to in such a suit cannot bind the public. In a suit under section 92 the proposed scheme of management can be set aside if found necessary in the interests of the public.

It is contended that the award so far as the family property is concerned is bad, because there were no disputes about it. We think the terms of the reference (Exhibit P-2) are quite clear. We have had the original read out to us. The reference was also with regard to "moveable and immoveable property of the said joint family in Hyderabad Deccan, the Districts of Berar and Laxmangadh and other places." There is no property of the temple in Laxmangadh. It is perfectly clear that the reference was with regard to the family property as well as the endowed property.

(8) 20 Ind. Cas. 37; 35 A. 459; 11 A. L. J. 673.

It is contended on the authority of Mohammad Ibrahim Khan v. Ahmad Said Khan (9) that the right to management of property belonging to a public trust cannot be the subject-matter of a reference to arbitration. In our opinion section 92 would be no bar to a suit asking for joint management of endowed property by the descendants of the founder. It follows, therefore, that there could be a valid reference to arbitration in such a case.

It is contended that the arbitrator has created an anomalous estate and that he had no power to prevent a partition. The award merely expresses a hope that the parties should not divide their family property for the present. There is nothing to prevent any of the parties suing for partition. We can see nothing anomalous in the parties not dividing their family estate and at the same time members of the family carrying on a separate trade or business for their individual benefit.

The arbitrator has decided that the actual cost of funeral expenses in the family should be given by the managers but that the amount should not exceed the maximum fixed. We can find nothing illegal in this.

Objection is taken to that part of the award which says that Ramlal shall pay through the hands of Murlidhar Rs. 3,000 (three thousand) to members of the family in consideration of their rights over the land purchased by Murlidhar. As Murlidhar is not a party before us, we decline to go into the question whether he was sufficiently represented before the arbitrator by his father Ramlal.

It is contended that the real arbitrator appointed by the parties was one Baxi Raghunath Prashad, that his name was omitted from the agreement of reference, as he was in Government service, and that the Swamiji was only a benami arbitrator. Familiar as we are with the plea of benami, this is the first case in which it is seriously argued that a named arbitrator really represented another person. We agree with the lower Court that the respondent is not entitled to give evidence contradicting the terms of the written submission. In any case, the evidence only shows that Baxi Raghunath Prashad, a Judge in Hyderabad, advised the parties to sign the reference and that he promised to assist the Swamiji with his advice on points of law and that after his death the Swamiji was not at first willing to proceed with the arbitration. The understanding of the parties was no doubt that the arbitrator should receive assistance on points of law from this gentleman, but his presence and assistance were not conditions precedent to the arbitration. We may note that the Swamiji was the spiritual preceptor of the parties who had confidence in him. It is, therefore, natural that he should have been chosen to settle their disputes.

These are all the points argued before us. We have come to the conclusion that the award, with the exception of the portion which has been admitted to be ultra vires, should be filed. We, therefore, order the award to be filed and pronounce judgment according to it to the extent found valid. We fix Rs. 250 (two hundred and fifty) as Pleader's fee in this Court and order costs in both Courts to be paid by defendant Ramlal.

Order accordingly.

RAM LAL DAS, COMMON MANAGER TO THE ESTATE OF SACHINDRA NATH ROY, AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS —APPELLANTS

BANDI RAM MOOKHAPADHAYA, AND ON HIS DEATH HIS HEIRS AND LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES KALI SANKAR MOOKHERJEE AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 54, 67, 169 (c)—Rent, arrears of, what are—Interest payable on arrears, whether rent.

When rent falls due and is not paid, it becomes an arrear under section 54 of the Bengal Tenancy

Act, and carries interest under section 67, and the amount payable as interest is thus part of the rent, within the meaning of section 169 (c) of the Act. [p. 999, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Birbhum, dated the 11th June 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, Suri, dated the 22nd July 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Anilendranath Rai Chowdhury, for the Appellants.—Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of money. Defendants Nos. 1 to 6 obtained a rent decree against defendants Nos. 7 to 8, who are dar patnidars of the taluk. The dar-patni taluk was sold in execution thereof. The sale was confirmed in 1913. Rs. 2,506 remained in deposit as surplus sale-proceeds in the Court The present appellants then applied for the withdrawal of the amount in deposit under section 169 (c) of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the amount was allowed to be withdrawn in May 1914. Plaintiff brought this suit for recovery of money on the ground that defendant No. 8 had mortgaged his interest in the dar patni taluk in plaintiff's favour, that he obtained a decree on the mortgage and that the decree was partially satisfied from the sale of defendant No. 8's other properties, that by virtue of his mortgage his lien was transferred to the surplus sale-proceeds and that my clients were entitled to arrears up to the date of sale and not confirmation of sale. Both the Courts found that my clients would be entitled to the arrears up to the date of sale and that they would get no interest on the same. I would refer your Lordships to Bejoy Chand v. Shashi Bhushan Bose (1) The question at issue then is whether I would get interest or not. Although section 169 clearly says that my clients would be entitled to arrears up to the date of the confirmation of sale, yet the ruling of Jenkins, C. J., is against me when he held that the interest of the judgment-debtor would be subsisting only up to the date of sale. Now, my sole point is that the lower Court erred in not allowing me interest on the arrears of rent. I would draw your Lordships' attention to the Bengal Tenancy Act, section 3 (5) and section 54 (3). Section 67 also clearly entitles me to interest. See Prafulla Nath Tagore v. Matabaddin Mandal (2), Moharajadhiraj Bejoy Chand Mohatab Bahadur v. S. C. Mookerjee (3), Maharaja Monindra Chandra Nandy Bahadur v. Asar Mahmud Mandal (4). The last case was decided by Brett, J., and was dissented from by Fletcher, J., in Prafulla Nath Tagore v. Matabaddin Mandal (2).

Babu Uma Charan Laha, for the Respondents —The whole question is whether rent includes 'interest.' See section 3 (5). Interest is not paid for use and occupation of land. The tenant is liable for interest no doubt, but not as a part of rent. Rent does not include interest, otherwise it would have been clearly mentioned in the section. That such is the intention of the Legislature is obvious from the wording of section 63 of the Court of Wards Act IX of 1879. The mortgagee should have preference over the landlord in the matter of interest. I would rely on Koylash Chandra De v. Tarak Nath Mandal (5), Maharaja Manindra Chandra Nandy Bahadur v. Asar Mahmud Mandal (4) Meharajadhiraj Bejoy Chand Mohatab Bahadur v. S. C. Mookerjee (3); the case in Prafulla Nath Tagore v. Mahtabaddin Mandal (2) also followed Koylash Chandra De v. Tarak Nath Mandal (5).

Babu Anilendranath Rai Chaudhury, in reply.—Rent includes interest as there is the statutory obligation on the part of the tenant to pay interest after his default to pay the rent. The tenant is bound to pay rent and interest for the use and occupation of the land on default. Interest, like rent, is a charge on the holding. The provisions of section 169 of the Bengal Tenancy Act support my contention.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of Rs. 547-5 principal and Rs. 93 as interest thereon under the following circumstances.

The defendants Nos. 1 to 6 were putnidars who obtained a decree for rent of a dar-patni against defendants Nos. 7 and 8. The taluk was sold in execution of the decree on the 2nd July 1912 and the sale was confirmed on the 8th March 1913. After satisfying the rent decree, there remained in deposit in Court Rs. 2,506 as surplus sale-proceeds. The patnidars applied for payment to them (out of the surplus sale-proceeds) of the rent which had fallen due in respect of the tenure between the institution of the suit and the date of the confirmation of sale, obtained an ex parte order and withdrew the sum of Rs. 547-5 for arrears up to the date of the confirmation of sale.

The present suit was instituted by the plaintiff on the allegation that the defendant No. 8, one of the dar-patnidars, had mortgaged his dar-patni interest to the plaintiff and the latter had obtained a mortgage decree which was partially satisfied by the sale of other properties, and that the mortgage lien over the property sold had been transferred to the surplus sale proceeds.

Two questions were in dispute in the Court below. The first is whether the defendants were entitled to arrears only up to the date of sale and not up to the date of confirmation of sale, and the second whether they were entitled to any interest on the rent which fell due between the date of the institution of the suit and the date of sale.

The Court below has held that the patnidar was entitled to rent only up to the date of sale and having regard to the decision of this Court in the case of Bejoy Chand v. Shashi Bhushan Bose (1) the learned Pleader for the appellants could not press his objection on this point.

The only question which has been argued before us is whether under the provisions of section 169, clause (c) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the landlord is entitled to interest on the rent.

Now, the word 'rent' is defined in section 3 of the Act as "whatever is lawfully payable or deliverable in money or kind by a tenant to his landlord on account of the use or occupation of the land held by the tenant", and sub section (3) of section 54 of the Act lays down: "any instalment or part of an instalment of rent not duly paid at or before the time when it falls due shall be deemed an arrear." Section 67 provides that "an arrear of rent shall bear simple interest at the rate of $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum from the expiration of that quarter of the agricultural year in which the instalment falls due to the date of payment or of the institution of the suit, whichever date is earlier."

The question whether the word 'rent' in section 169 includes interest has been considered in three cases in this Court. In the first case, Maharajadhiraj Bejoy Chand Mohatab Bahadur v. S. C. Mookherjee (3), decided by Ghose and Caspersz, JJ., the former observed: "Speaking for myself, I may say that the Legislature could never have intended when using the word 'rent' in section 169, clause (c), to exclude the interest accruing thereupon and to put the decree-holder under the necessity of bringing a fresh suit for the interest only."

In the next case, an unreported decision in Second Appeal No. 2260 of 1906 decided by Mr. Justice Brett on the 29th April 1908, the learned Judge held a contrary view.

In the third case of Prafulla Nath Tagore v. Matabaddin Mandal (2) Fletcher and Smither, J.J., following the case in Maharajadhiraj Bejoy Chand Mohatab Bahadur v. S. C. Mookherjee (3), held that rent would include interest. It is true that the learned Judges treated the observations of Ghose, J., in the case of Maharajadhiraj Bejoy Chand Mohatab Bahadur v. S. C. Mookerjee (3) as a decision of the Court and as clear authority in favour of the landlord. As a matter of fact, the case was decided upon an admission of the judgment-debtor that the claim of the landlord to the interest was a just one and Ghose, J., himself pointed out that upon the petition as presented by the judgment debtor admitting the justice of the plaintiff's demand, no question of the character that was raised by the Subordinate Judge should have been raised and discussed. Then he made the observation which we have quoted above; it was, therefore, an obiter: and Mr. Justice Brett in the unreported case, we have referred to, also pointed out that it was an obiter of Mr. Justice Ghose. But although that is so, we are inclined to accept the view taken by Ghose, J., in that case followed by Fletcher and Smither, JJ., in Prafulla Nath Tagore's case (2).

We have been referred to section 161, clause (c), which runs as follows: "The terms 'arrears' and 'arrears of rent' shall be deemed to include interest decreed under section 67 or damages awarded in lieu of interest under sub-section (1) of section 68." It is contended that had the word 'rent' included interest thereupon, there would have been no necessity of adding clause (c) to section 161. But as soon as rent falls due and is not paid, it becomes an arrear under section 54 and carries interest under section 67. The money payable as interest, therefore, becomes part of the rent. Clause (c) was probably added to section 161 to make the point clear.

However that may be, we agree in the view taken by Ghose, J., that the Legislature could never have intended in section 169 to exclude the interest accruing upon the rent and to put the decree holder under the necessity of bringing a fresh suit for the interest only.

For these reasons, we think that the decision of the Court below is wrong. The appeal is allowed. The appellant will be entitled to full costs of this Court. There will be costs in proportion in the lower Court.

The cross-objection is not pressed and is dismissed.

CHARU CHANDRA BANDOPADHAYA AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—PETITIONERS

MR. L. FAITHFUL—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 128—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 115—Principal and surety—Liability of surety, whether co-extensive with that of principal—Limitation for suit against surety, commencement of.

The liabilities of a principal and his surety, though arising under the same transaction, are distinct, because the liability of a surety does not necessarily in all cases arise simultaneously with that of the principal, and it may happen that the remedy against the principal is barred when the liability of the surety arises. The question depends on the terms of the contract of guarantee by which the surety has bound himself. Section 128 of the Contract Act merely defines the measure of liability and has no reference to the extinction of the liability by the operation of the Statute of Limitation. [p. 1001, col. 1.]

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 borrowed a certain sum from the plaintiff under a registered promissory note payable on demand. Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 by a letter addressed to the plaintiff stood sureties for the debt, stating that they made themselves liable for the debt. The suit on the promissory note was instituted more than three years from the date of the letter by the sureties:

Held, (1) that as against the sureties limitation began to run from the date of the sureties' own contract; [p. 1000, col. 2.]

(2) that the liability of the sureties having arisen simultaneously with that of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and with the making of the advance, the suit against the sureties was barred under Article 115, Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 1000, col. 2.]

Rule against the order of the Sub-Judge, 3rd Court, 24-Pergannahs, in Small Cause Court Suit No. 286 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter (with him Babu Kshitish Chandra Sen), for the Petitioners:—The claim against the petitioners, who were sureties, is barred by limitation, as the suit was brought more than three years after date of the letter by which the petitioners proposed to be sureties for the debt. The present case is governed by Article 115 of the Limitation Act. The liability of the sureties will arise on their own contract and not on the contract of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. I rely on Sreenath Roy v. Peary Mohan (1) and Brojendro Kissore v. Hindustan Co-Operative Insurance Society (2) in which it has been held that so far as the liability of the sureties is concerned, limitation would depend upon the sureties' own contract.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukherjee, for the Opposite Party.—Article 115 of the Limitation Act does not govern this case. It appears that the promissory note executed by the debtors was registered, and the sureties rendered themselves liable for the due performance by the debtors of the contract made by the latter in the registered instrument. So the Article of the Limitation Act applicable is Article 116. The question of limitation of both the principal and the surety is to be considered with reference to the nature of the contract sued upon. The surety is a surety for the performance of the contract in writing and registered and, therefore, a suit against the surety for the performance of the contract in writing registered and made by the principal, cannot but be governed by Article 116. I rely on the principle laid down in Challaphroo v. Banga Behary Sen (3), Deb Narain Dutt v. Ram Sadhan Mandal (4), Panchanan Das (Girish Chandra Das) v. Kunja Behari Malo (5), Ambalavana Pandaram v. Vaguran (6), Sheshachala Naickar v. Varada Chariar (7). The cases in Sreenath Roy v. Peiry Mohan (1) and Khawja Muhammad Khan v. Husaini Begum (8) also support my contention. The Court below has, therefore, rightly passed a decree in favour of the defendants-petitioners.

Dr. Dwarkannath Mitter briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—In this case defendants Nos. 1 and 2 borrowed certain sum from the plaintiff on a registered promissory note payable on demand. Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 in a letter addressed to the plaintiff agreed as follows:—

"My brother Shib Chandra Bandopadhaya is, for his own necessities, borrowing from you Rs. 150. There is no objection to your paying him the money and we make ourselves fully liable for it. On that account you need have no anxiety. He will pay your interest month by month. As to that there will be no excuse or objection."

The suit was instituted more than three years from the date of this letter. The lower Court overruled the plea of limitation raised by defendants Nos. 3 and 4 and decreed that suit against all the defendants. The present Rule was issued under section 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act at the instance of defendants Nos. 3 and 4, and the only question for our consideration is whether the decision on the question of limitation is correct. I feel very little difficulty in holding that the suit against the sureties is barred. In the case of Sreenath Roy v. Peary Mohan (1) it was held that a promissory note payable on demand is a present debt payable without any demand and that the liability of the surety in such cases arises simultaneously with that of the debtor, i. e., with the making of the advance. The liability of a surety does not necessarily in all cases arise simultaneously with that of the principal. It often happens that the remedy against the principal is barred when the liability of the surety arises. The question depends on the terms of the contract of guarantee by which the surety has bound himself. In this case, having regard to that, the liability of the sureties arose simultaneously with the making of the advance and as such the suit against them is barred under Article 115 of the Limitation Act.

It has, however, been argued that the contract between the debtor and the creditor being in writing registered and the sureties having rendered themselves responsible for the due performance of that contract, the Article of the Limitation Act applicable even against the sureties is Article 116.

In support of his contention the learned Vakil for the plaintiff who has appeared to show cause has relied on Ambalavana Pandaram v. Vaguran (6), Sreenath Roy v. Peary Mohan (1), Sheshachala Naickar v. Varada Chariar (7), Panchanan Das (Girish Chandra Das) v. Kunja Behari Malo (5), Deb Narain Dutt v. Ramsadhan Mandal (4) and Challaphroo v. Banga Behary Sen (3).

These are either cases in which it has been held that when a person has entered into a contract with another and that contract is reduced into writing and signed by one of the parties alone, the person who has not signed may sue on that contract or be sued on it, or cases in which, following the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Khwaja Muhammad Khan v. Husaini Begum (8), it has been held that where there is a contract between two persons for the benefit of a third party, the person for whose benefit the contract is entered into, though no party to it, may proceed in equity to enforce it. In all such cases the question of limitation will no doubt depend on the nature of the contract sued upon. These cases to my mind do not touch the present question. Here there are two contracts by two different parties and the liability of each can only arise upon his own contract. I am not aware of any other principle that can be applied to such cases. In Sreenath Roy v. Peary Mohan (1) the question was whether the limitation to enforce the contract of guarantee in that case was governed by Article 65 or Article 115, and the Court held that the case was governed by latter article. That decision does not help the plaintiff and in so far as the decision on the question of limitation was based not on a consideration of the nature of the contract entered into by the plaintiff debtor but of the contract entered into by the surety, it is against the plaintiff. In De Colyar's Law of Guarantees, 3rd Edition, page 462, on the authority of reported English decisions, the law is thus: "In the case of a guarantee not under seal after six years have elapsed from the period at which the surety first became liable to make payment to the creditor, the right of the creditor to compel him to do so will be barred by 21 Jac. II c. 16, s. 3. If, however, the guarantee be under seal the creditor's rights against the surety will not be barred until the expiration of twenty years." This shows clearly that limitation in such cases depends on the sureties' own contract. The case of Brojendro Kissore Roy v. Hindustan Co-Operative Insurance Society (2) clearly lays down that the liabilities of the principal and the surety, though arising under the same transaction, are distinct and that section 128 of the Contract Act only defines the measure of liability and has no reference to the extinction of the liability by the operation of the Statute of Limitation. This is a direct authority in favour of the defendants, the petitioners before us.

I would, therefore, make the Rule absolute and set aside the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge in so far as the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 are concerned and dismiss the suit against them with costs.

The petitioners are entitled to their costs in this Rule. We assess the hearing-fee at one gold mohur.

Rule made absolute.

Appeal—Interlocutory order, compliance with, whether destroys right of appeal—Forum, proper—Valuation of suit—Adjudication by Court—Appellate Court, how to be determined.

A plaintiff valued his suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Rs. 5,100, but on the defendants' objection that the value was excessive, the Subordinate Judge went into the question and recorded a finding that the proper value of the suit was Rs. 1,385 and returned the plaint for presentation to the Court which had jurisdiction to try the suit. The plaintiff complied with the order but without giving up the right of appeal, and shortly afterwards preferred an appeal to the High Court against the Sub-Judge's order, when it was objected that having complied with the order he could not question it:

Held, (1) that the plaintiff was not deprived of his right of appeal: [p. 1002, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

No 290 of 1916.

WALMSLEY, J.—This appeal is preferred by the plaintiffs and it arises in the following manner. The plaintiffs filed a suit (No. 298 of 1913) in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Barisal for a declaration of their Zemindari right to some land, and they valued the suit at Rs. 5,100. The defendants urged that the valuation was excessive, and that the true value was not more than Rs. 1,000. The learned Subordinate Judge went into this question and found that the value of the property in suit was Rs. 1,385 and as there was then at Barisal a Munsif empowered to try suits up to Rs. 2,000 in value, he returned the plaint to be presented in the Munsif's Court. The plaintiffs amended the valuation and presented the plaint in the Munsif's Court under protest, and shortly afterwards preferred this appeal against the Subordinate Judge's order.

A preliminary objection was raised to the effect that the plaintiffs, having complied with the order, could not be allowed to question it, and in support of the objection reference was made to the case of Beni Madhub Das v. Jotindra Mohun Tagore (1). The facts are similar, save that in the present instance the Pleader wrote on the plaint "Amended under Court's order but without giving up our right of appeal" and re-filed to-day, "without giving up the right of appeal." It appears to me that the fact that the plaintiffs pointedly declared that they were going to appeal, distinguishes the present case from the one quoted. We are now concerned only with the question whether their action took away their right of appeal, and I think we should hold that it did not.

Then the question arises, in what Court does the appeal lie? Is it to this Court on the ground that the valuation put on the suit by the plaintiffs exceeds Rs. 5,000, or to the District Judge's Court on the ground that the correct valuation as found by the learned Subordinate Judge is below Rs. 5,000? For the defendants reliance is placed on the case of Boidya Nath Adya v. Makhan Lal Adya (2). That was a converse case. The plaintiff valued his suit at Rs. 4,200 and appealed to the District Judge against an order refusing to appoint a Receiver. This Court held that the valuation was unquestionably more than Rs. 5,000, and that the District Judge was not competent to deal with the appeal. The principle may be the same, but here the valuation is itself questioned and is in fact the subject-matter of the appeal, although technically the appeal is against the order consequential on the finding as to valuation, whereas in the case cited the application for appointment of a Receiver was dealt with before there was any decision as to valuation. On the other hand, the plaintiffs rely upon the case of Nilmony Singh v. Jagabandhu Roy (3). That is practically on all fours with the present case, and the only difficulty that arises in applying the principle followed there lies in the remarks of the learned Judges about the valuation being bona fide: they said it might be wrong to determine the forum of appeal on the basis of plaintiff's valuation, if that valuation had been found to be excessive and intended to change the venue of the appeal. In the present case the defendants contend that the plaintiffs have deliberately over-valued the suit in order to avoid a plea of res judicata. The learned Judges, however, did not say that the valuation must be bona fide: they only expressed a doubt as to what would be the effect if the valuation were not bona fide. This question of the bona fides of plaintiff's valuation does not appear to have been raised again in any reported case. The difficulty of applying a rule that the valuations must be bona fide is considerable and the result might be embarrassing.

Reference was also made to the Full Bench decision in the case of Ijjatulla Bhuyan v. Chandra Mohan Banerjee (4). The question was different, but in Mookerjee, J.'s judgment some useful remarks are made, and I think we should act upon his view: "The forum of appeal depends not upon the value as adjudged, but upon the value as accepted by the plaintiff after adjudication." Here, save for the compliance with the Subordinate Judge's order, the plaintiffs still maintain that the valuation exceeds Rs. 5,000. I think we should hold that in consequence the appeal lies to this Court.

Now to come to the merits of the case. The questions to be determined are the annual value and the number of years' purchase to be allowed. The learned Judge finds the nett annual value to be Rs. 138-8-1. The plaintiffs contend that this is wrong, and that it should be about

(2) 17 C. 680.

(4) 34 C. 954; 6 C. L. J. 255; 11 C. W. N. 133 (F. B.).

Rs. 320. Their argument is based on the results of proceedings under section 105 of the Tenancy Act, but I fail to see how they can make those decisions a basis for the defendants were not the tenants set up by the plaintiffs. If the plaintiffs' facts are correct, those proceedings took place between parties who had no interest in the land, and the judgments are valueless. On the contrary, the figure taken by the learned Judge is the plaintiffs' own statement in the plaint, and on their allegations it is at least doubtful whether they could successfully maintain a suit for the variation of the rent.

Another objection to the plaintiffs' argument is that this ground is not set out in the grounds of appeal. There is a reference to the Record of Rights in the fifth ground, but there is no evidence that the plaintiffs, if successful in this suit, would be entitled to recover seven rupees per kani from their tenants, and further no formal evidence has been given as to the extent of a kani. I think that in regard to the nett annual income we must uphold the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge.

With regard to the number of years' purchase, the learned Subordinate Judge says that there are two kabalas showing sale of the Zemindari right at ten years' purchase, and two showing twenty-five years' purchase: He thinks the latter an unsafe criterion because there are valuable 'hats' on the land sold, and numerous jalkars. I think this reasoning is unsound. In the first place, these four kabalas taken together only cover a two-annas share, and it is hardly wise to come to a conclusion on the transfer of such small shares. Secondly, the presence of 'hats and jalkars' undoubtedly creates the possibility of an expanding income, but I doubt whether that possibility is enough to account for the difference between ten and twenty five. The question, however, is not to be determined by what has been paid for a share in this particular Zemindari, but on the basis of what is commonly regarded as a fair return for money laid out in landed property.

When land is acquired compulsorily, claimant demands as much as twenty five years' purchase, and I think the number given is generally from fifteen to twenty. In the present instance I think the plaintiffs should be allowed to value their suit at fifteen years' purchase of the nett annual value, that is to say, at Rs. 2,077-8-0.

Five other suits connected with the present one were filed by the plaintiffs, four in the Court of the Subordinate Judge and one in the Court of the Munsif: the last was transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge to be tried with the others. Similar orders were passed on them, and the appeals, preferred in the District Judge's Court, have been called up to this Court for the sake of convenience. They are as follows: —

				Plaintiffs' valuation.	Sub-Judge's valuation.
				Rs.	Rs.
Title Suit	3	Appeal	No. 26	...2,500	400
„	„ 4	„	„ 27	...2,100	260
„	„ 5	„	„ 28	...3,100	680
„	„ 11	„	„ 29	...3,500	950
„	„ 246	„	„ 30	...1,100	200

On the figure that we have adopted, the valuation in these suits will become Re. 600, 390, 1,020, 1,425, and 300 respectively. All are, therefore, triable by a Munsif, and three of them by a Munsif who is not vested with special powers.

A sixth suit mentioned in the judgment is not the subject of appeal, viz., Title Suit No. 247.

On these findings the order of the Subordinate Judge was correct in regard to Title Suits Nos. 3, 4, 5, 11 and 246 and wrong in regard to Title Suit No. 298.

The result is that the Appeal No. 290 is decreed, and it is ordered that the plaint be returned to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, where the suit will proceed according to law; while the other appeals are dismissed. Each party will bear his own costs in this Court in all these appeals. In Appeal No. 290 the parties will bear their own costs in the lower Courts also.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—The facts of this case are fully stated in the judgment of my learned brother and it is not necessary to repeat them.

If the question were res integra, I would have felt considerable difficulty in holding that when a question of valuation is put in issue and is determined upon evidence, adduced by the parties, by a Court competent to decide such a question, that the value of the suit for purposes of section 21 of the Civil Courts Act is not the value so determined but the value which the plaintiff has thought it fit to put on his own suit. In this case even according to our own valuation the appeal lay to the Court of the District Judge and not to this Court. However, having regard to the decision of this Court in Nilmony Singh v. Jagabandhu Roy (3), I feel constrained to hold that an appeal lies to this Court.

On the question of valuation I agree with the decision arrived at by my learned brother.

Appeal No. 290 allowed;
Appeals Nos 26 to 30 dismissed.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Hooghly, dated the 8th September 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Court at that place, dated the 30th June 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. D. N. Mitter (with him Babu Narain Chandra Kar), for the Appellants:—After the Privy Council decision in Ranjit Singh v. Kali Dasi Deli (1) it can no longer be maintained that Chowkidari Chakran lands, situated within the ambit of a Putni, should go to the Zemindar after resumption and resettlement by Government, unless there be an express reservation in respect of these lands in the Putni lease itself. No such express reservation was made in the present case. It has been held in Nafar Chandra v. Bejoy Chand (2) that even if the Putni lease reserves in favour of the Zemindar the right to appoint and dismiss Chowkidars, that is not sufficient to show that these lands were excepted from the Putni lease. See also Girish Chandra Roy v. Hem Chandra Roy (3). The contrary view taken in Nitya Nund Hazra v. Maharajadhiraj Bejoy Chand Mohatab (4) cannot be regarded as good law. The presence of such a claim in the lease is, therefore, immaterial. The present suit is also barred by limitation as it was not brought within 12 years of re-settlement with the Zemindar. See Raj Krishna Rudra v. Fakir Dome (5).

Babu Kishori Lall Chatterji), for the Respondents :—The Privy Council case in Ranjit Singh v. Kali Dasi Debi (1) does not say that nothing but an express reservation can keep the Zemindar's rights. It is sufficient if an implied reservation can be made out. In this case there are strong grounds for holding that there was an implied reservation, because in addition to the fact that the right to appoint and dismiss Chowkidars was retained by the Zemindar, there is the additional point that the services of the Chowkidar were rendered to the Zemindar and not to the Putnidar. This latter point distinguishes this case from the case in Nafar Chandra v. Bejoy Chand (2).

On the question of limitation, it is clear that the case cannot come under Article 142 of the Limitation Act, because it has been found that the Zemindar or the plaintiff was never in possession of the land in suit. Even if Article 142 applied, this suit cannot be time barred, as it has been found that the possession of the defendants and their vendors could not have begun earlier than

Dr. D. N. Mitter briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment from certain lands known as Chowkidari Chakran lands. The plaintiff based his claim on a lease from the Maharajah of Burdwan, who is the proprietor of the estate within the ambit of which these lands lie. The defendants are the tenants of the Putnidars, who held under a Putni lease granted in 1213 B. S. corresponding to 1806-7 A. D. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal decided in favour of the plaintiff, on the ground that the clause in the lease giving the Zamindar full power to appoint or dismiss the Chowkidar shows that these lands could not have been transferred to the Putnidars. The point that arises in this appeal is the same which arose in the case of Nofar Chandra v. Bejoy Chand (2). That case was decided by my learned brother Teunon, J., and myself and we held that such a clause in the Putni lease had not the effect of reserving to the Zamindar and excluding from the Putni the Chowkidari Chakran land. When we delivered the judgment, our attention was not drawn to the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Ranjit Singh v. Kali Dasi Debi (1). That decision lays down that ordinarily the Zemindar's interest to Chowkidari Chakran lands resumed by Government and transferred to the Zemindar under Bengal Act VI of 1870 passed by virtue of such a transfer to the holder of the Putni lease in the village within which such lands are situated. This authority confirms our previous decision and the essential conditions of the lease being similar, I have no hesitation in holding that in the present case the right in the land passed to the Putnidar on resumption and that the plaintiff has no title which will enable him to succeed against the tenants, the Putnidars.

It was also contended that the suit is barred by limitation. But on the view I have taken, it is unnecessary to determine this point.

The appeal is decreed. The judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are set aside and the original judgment and decree of the Munsif are restored and the plaintiff's suit dismissed.

The appellants are entitled to their costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal decreed.

RAM NATH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch I, Art. 120—Declaratory suit—Limitation, commencement of—Denial of title, when furnishes cause of action—Revenue Court, refusal of, to effect partition, effect of—Possession not disturbed.

Where a person is in possession of property, it is not obligatory upon him to file a suit for a declaration of his title, unless the denial of his title by the opposite party has the effect of disturbing his possession or doing him other injury not capable of being remedied otherwise than by a suit for declaration. [p. 1006, col. 2.]

The refusal of a Revenue Court to effect partition of a joint khewat till the shares of the contending parties are determined by the Civil Court, does not necessarily vest the opposite party with an adverse title, if the possession of the person, against whom the order is passed, remains undisturbed. [p. 1006, col. 2; p. 1007, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 16th December 1918, upholding that of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 24th February 1917.

The Hon'ble Mr. Wasir Hasan and Mr. Niamatullah, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bisheshar Nath Srivastava, for Respondents Nos. 3 and 8.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to this appeal are co-sharers in Patti Bhawani Singh, which comprises an 8-annas share of an under-proprietary right in the village

PARMESHWAR DIN v. RAM NATH.

Nandaur. Their predecessors, Sheodat and Nandan Dube, obtained a sankalpnama in respect of the said share from Hanoman Singh, Bisheshar Singh and Gajadhar Singh, the superior proprietors, in lieu of Rs 600 on the th January 1892 The sankalpnama did not specify the share granted to each Sheodat and Nandan Dube did not get mutation of names effected in respect of the said share in the khewat but their names were entered in the jamabandi. Sheodat was succeeded by his widow, Musammat Dilasa, and by his brothers, Debidin and Shankar. The village had two Pattis, Patti Amir Singh and Patti Bhawanidin. The land comprised in the sankalpnama appertains to the latter Patti.

In 1890 Balbhaddar applied for a partition of his share in the village, making Nandan, Musammat Dilasa, Debidin and Shankar, who were also co sharers in Patti Amir Singh, parties to the proceeding (Exhibit A1). There was some land which belonged to the co sharers of both the Pattis. At the time of the partition, the partition officer wanted to ascertain shares of each of the co-sharers of Patti Bhawanidin but found difficulty in determining it. The assertion of the heirs of Sheodat was that the share of Sheodat was one-third. The partition officer eventually allowed an imperfect partition of Patti Amir Singh but refused to allow a partition of Patti Bhawanidin, because the names of Nandan, Debidin, Shankar and Musammat Dilasa were not borne on the under-proprietary register and there was a dispute as to the extent of the share which Nandan and other persons had therein (Exhibit 34).

In 1894 an application was made by Shankar, Musammat Dilasa and Debidin for the entry of their names in the revenue papers in respect of a half share of Patti Bhawanidin, but the application was opposed by Nandan who asserted that their share was one-third. The Revenue Court ordered the names of the applicants to be entered with that of Nandan without any specification of shares and directed the applicants to get their share determined by the Civil Court (Exhibit 36).

In 1916 another attempt was made by the present plaintiffs for a partition of their share, but they were directed to go to the Civil Court to get their share determined. The present suit was thereupon filed by the plaintiffs for a declaration that they were the owners of an 8 annas share in the said Patti. The Courts below decreed the claim.

The only point urged for consideration in this appeal is that the suit for a declaratory decree was barred by time. Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) permits a party entitled to any right as to any property to seek a declaration against any person, denying or interested in denying his title to such property, but it is not obligatory upon him to file a suit unless such denial has the effect of disturbing his possession or doing him other injury not capable of being remedied otherwise than by a suit for declaration of his title. Article 120 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) allows a period of six years for such a suit from the date when the right to sue accrues. But though such a suit for the declaration of such a title may be barred by time, the right of the person, whose title is denied, to hold the property is not lost so long as his title to the property subsists. If he is not in possession, he cannot sue for a declaration of title. If he is in possession, he can sue for a declaration of his title, but is not bound to do so, unless anything has been done, which has the effect of prejudicing his right to continue in possession. In Jevanand v. Beni Madho (1) it was accordingly held that where a plaintiff has got a right, every invasion of that right gives him a fresh cause of action. As pointed out in Muhammad Taqi v. Muhammad Baqar (2), if a person who has title to immoveable property allows another to retain possession under an openly avowed claim that he is holding in his own right and fails for a period of 12 years to vindicate his title by recovering possession, his right to the property becomes extinguished. The refusal of the Revenue Court to make a partition till the shares of the contending parties were determined by the Civil Court does not necessarily vest the opposite party with an adverse title, if the possession of the person, against whom the order was passed, remains undisturbed.

(1) 4 Ind. Cas. 159; 12 O. C. 320.
(2) 20 Ind. Cas. 580; 16 O. C. 163.

The learned Counsel for the defendants-appellants has relied on the decisions in Francis Legge v. Rambaran Singh (3) and Akbar Khan v. Turaban (4), but a different view was taken in Allah Jilai v. Umrao Hussain (5). The effect of the entry of the name of the opposite party may in some instances operate to throw a cloud upon the title of the person whose name is removed and disturb his right to hold possession thereof. Such a disturbance, if effected, may provide a starting point for limitation, which may in course of time extinguish the title of the former. But in this case there has been no such disturbance. The Revenue Court directed the names of both the parties to be entered in the revenue papers and the finding of the Courts below is that they continued in joint possession, though their specific shares were left undetermined.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Reversioner, suit to establish title as —Burden of proof—Appeal - Appellate Court, duty of, to come to clear findings of fact.

In a suit to establish title as a reversionary heir the plaintiff must show that he is the nearest reversionary heir. It is no part of the duty of the defendant to set up any nearer heirs. The whole of the onus is on the plaintiff. [p. 1008, col. 1.]

In trying an appeal it is the duty of the first Appellate Court to come to clear findings of fact, as they are final and the High Court in second appeal cannot go behind them. [p. 1008, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Burdwan, dated the 20th of April 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Court at that place, dated the 18th of April 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhury (with him Babu Sajani Kanta Sinha), for the Appellants.—The judgment in this case of the learned Subordinate Judge is not satisfactory and cannot be sustained, inasmuch as he does not come to clear and definite findings on the facts in dispute, which he should have primarily done as the final Court of facts. The plaintiff's case was that he was reversionary heir of one Asananda and it was for him to establish his position as such before the defendants could be called upon to rebut the position. The onus clearly lies upon the plaintiff and the learned Subordinate Judge was clearly wrong in thinking that it was the duty of the defendants to set up a nearer heir to demolish the position of the plaintiff.

Then also as regards the properties to which the plaintiff laid claim the learned Subordinate Judge went on wrong premises. He did not carefully go into the written statement of the defendant. Had he done so, he would not have committed the grave error that he has committed in his judgment. The learned Judge failed to take note of the real and substantial contentions of the parties. So my prayer for a remand, I submit, cannot be resisted.

Babu Bipin Behari Ghosh (Junr.) (with him Babu Samarendra Kumar Dutt), for the Respondent.—I submit that no case for a remand has been made out by the other side. Inasmuch as the defendants could not put up a nearer heir and the plaintiff's case was quite consistent with all the surrounding facts, the lower Court could not but give him a decree. The learned Subordinate Judge did his best to come to findings of fact, which cannot be reversed by your Lordships in second appeal.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhury not called upon to reply.

HARI PADA MUKHERJEE v. RADHA BULLAV PAL.

JUDGMENT.—We regret that we have to remand this appeal. The judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is very unsatisfactory. It is confused, ill-expressed and the learned Subordinate Judge does not seem to have applied his mind to the points for decision. He ought to remember that in trying an appeal it is his duty to come to clear findings, as they are final and this Court cannot go behind them.

In dealing with the question whether the plaintiff is the reversionary heir of Asananda, he says: "the learned Munsif has found that the plaintiff and Asananda and Parmananda are of the same family. Therefore, the appeal must succeed." Then he says, "the defendants could not set up a nearer heir." It is no part of the duty of the defendants to set up any nearer heir. The whole of the onus is on the plaintiffs to show that they are the reversioners. The Subordinate Judge then says, "so the evidence adduced by the plaintiff must be accepted as sufficient." Probably what he intended to say was that inasmuch as there was no evidence on the other side, although the evidence given on behalf of the plaintiff is that of interested persons, having regard to the other facts of the case such evidence ought to be accepted. If he had said that one could have understood his point of view, but the way in which he has treated the matter throwing the onus on the defendants is responsible for a confused and indefinite finding. We think he ought to arrive at a clear finding with regard to this matter.

Then as regards the properties the plaintiff based his claim upon the fact that Asananda and Permananda were brothers in joint possession, that Permananda died first, leaving a widow named Taramoni, that Taramoni survived her husband for a considerable number of years, that after Taramoni's death Adharmoni, the widow of Asananda, became possessed of this property and held adversely for 12 years and after her death her daughter Sarnamoyee obtained possession of this property. The defendants' case was that after Permananda's death, Taramoni his widow succeeded to the property, that Adharmoni died before her and that on the death of Taramoni "while she was the owner of the property left by her husband, there was no one alive in the family of her husband. So Sarnamoyee got the property by inheritance and was all along in possession." The portion of the judgment in which the learned Subordinate Judge deals with this matter is very confused. He says that "the defendants stated in their defence that the widow of Permananda died after Adharmoni and so Sarnamoyee got his properties not as an heir of Adharmoni but adversely as against others. This contention is not tenable as the disputed properties had belonged to Asananda even according to the defendants." This is exactly what the defendants had not said. The defendants in two portions of the written statement, namely, in paragraph 10 and in paragraph 12, deal with the shares of the two brothers, paragraph 10 dealing with Asananda's share and paragraph 12 with Permananda's share. We regret to have to say that the learned Subordinate Judge in dealing with those matters ought to have carefully dealt with the real contentions between the parties.

The whole appeal, therefore, is remanded. He will have to come to a clear finding as to whether the plaintiff is the reversioner and, secondly, as regards the properties which he may be entitled to.

Costs will abide the final result of the case.

Case remanded.

Adverse possession—Acquiescence—Estoppel, equitable—Land lying unoccupied—Encroachment by erecting buildings—No mistaken belief as to ownership—Demolition of buildings.

No question of adverse possession or limitation can arise in respect of land practically lying unoccupied.

A question of acquiescence or equitable estoppel may arise where the owner of land sees another person erecting buildings upon it and, knowing that such person is under the mistaken belief that the land is his own property, purposely abstains from interference with the view of claiming a demolition of the buildings when erected. Where, however, the person encroaching on the land of another cannot be said to have been acting under any mistaken belief as to the ownership of the land, no question of acquiescence or equitable estoppel can arise. Adverse possession—contd.

——— Gift by joint owners—Petition to Collector for mutation of names, whether evidence of gift—Possession of donee, nature of—Evidence Act (1 of 1872), s. 91—Hindu Law—Will, construction of—Widow, estate taken by.

P, who died in 1867, executed a Will, clause 3 of which was in the following terms: "I have given my half share in Kariamangalam mitta to my wife, Nayar Alangarammal, alias Thayarammal, on account of her maintenance and other absolute use. She is at liberty to enjoy the same with powers of alienation by sale, etc." and by clause 4 he gave his property, in general terms, to the two infant sons of his eldest brother. The plaintiffs, the sons of the two foregoing, brought the present suit to establish their title to a moiety of the mitta or estate, and claimed, in the alternative, as persons entitled to succeed on the death of the testator's widow A., which occurred in 1912, to her property not disposed of during her lifetime or by her Will, that the moiety in question was undisposed of at her death and vested in them as her heirs.

The whole mitta originally belonged to the testator and his brother, and on the latter's death in 1879 his share became vested in his widow R. A. and R., the owners of the mitta, joined in a petition to the Collector in 189· reciting that they had given away the mitta to D., the daughter of R, and prayed that the mitta be transferred accordingly, and this was done. The defendant, the daughter of D., contended that in consequence of this, the moiety passed to D. and through her to the defendant and that the estate having been in the possession of D, and herself after D's death for upwards of 2 years, the plaintiffs' suit was barred by the rule of adverse possession:

Held, (1) that clause 3 of the Will gave an absolute interest in the moiety to the testator's wife, and that the 4th clause operated upon the remaining property only, and that on the death of P. his moiety of the mitta vested in his widow A. absolutely;

(2) that during the lifetime of R. the possession of D. was adverse as against both A. and R., that when on the death of R in 190· D. became entitled to a moiety of the property, the character of her possession of the other moiety as against A. was not changed, and as there had been an ouster of A. before the death of R which continued after her death, the possession of D. was adverse to A. throughout, and that consequently the suit must fail;

(3) that having regard to section 91 of the Evidence Act, although the petition of 1895 to the Collector and the change of names in the register were not admissible to prove a gift, they could be referred to as explaining the nature and character of the possession thenceforth held by D, as leading to the inference that the receipt of the rents by D. was a receipt in the character of donee and owner of the land and, therefore, in her own right and not as a trustee or manager for her mother and aunt. P C N. Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 11 (a)—"Lease for a term of not less than seven years," meaning of—Lease reserving right of re-entry, whether covered by section Occupancy rights, accrual of.

The intention and meaning of "lease for a term of not less than 7 years" in section 11 (a) of the Agra Tenancy Act is that from the commencement of the period the tenant shall have a certainty of freedom of disturbance for 7 years with a quid pro quo to the landlord in the provision that the tenant shall not count the period towards accrual of occupancy rights. A condition in the lease giving a power of re-entry to the landlord within the 7 years cuts at the very root of the principle which the law is intended to cover.

Where under a lease purporting to be for seven years, the landlord retains the power of re-entry on the whole or any unspecified part of a holding within the seven years, the lease cannot be regarded as one "for a term of not less than seven years" under proviso (a) to section of the Agra Tenancy Act so as to preclude the tenant from counting the seven years towards accrual of occupancy rights. U P B R ABDUL JALIL KHAN v MAN SINGH, 1 U. A Court cannot in the course of the decision of an appeal from one decree set aside a decree which dismisses a separate suit and has not been appealed against

P. sued G. to recover possession of certain land previously sold by her to the defendant, alleging fraud and undue influence. With regard to the same sale three other suits were also brought, one by a collateral of the last male holder for a declaration to protect her reversionary rights and two by rival pre-emptors. The first Court gave P. a decree and dismissed the other three suits G appealed, while the plaintiffs in the other suits did not prefer any appeal. In the course of the appeal P. and G put in a compromise, according to which G was to obtain half the land on payment of a certain sum of money. Thereupon the District Judge added the plaintiffs in the other three suits and ordered that those suits be re-opened and re-tried. G. preferred a second appeal:

The plaintiff complied with the order but without giving up the right of appeal, and shortly afterwards preferred an appeal to the High Court against the Sub-Judge's order, when it was objected that having complied with the order he could not question it:

Held, (1) that the plaintiff was not deprived of his right of appeal:

(2) that as the forum of appeal depended not upon the value as adjudged but upon the value as accepted by the plaintiff after adjudication, the appeal had been correctly presented to the High Court. C TARA KANTA DAS v. KALI PRASAD DAS, 23 C. W. N. 942 1001

Arbitration and award—Error of law patent on face of award—Award, whether liable to be set aside—Contravention of rule binding on parties, whether error of law—Vendor and purchaser—Contract, breach of, by vendor—Purchaser, whether can be made to pay damages—Common Law.

A Court will set aside an award if there is an error of law patent on the face of it.

Where a rule binding on the parties to an arbitration lays down that in no case is a particular party liable to pay a sum of money as damages or compensation, then an award directing that party to pay a sum of money is bad on the face of it in point of law.

Under rule 52 of the Rules of the Bombay Cotton Trade Association where a buyer refuses the cotton on account of non-approval of tender, he may exercise either of two options, viz, he may buy in the market at a reasonable rate on the account, risk and expense of the seller or he may invoice the cotton back to the seller at the market rate of the day, upon which the final award is made; but he is not bound to exercise either of these options, and the failure to exercise either of these options does not render him liable to pay damages to the seller.

Where an award imposes a liability on a party which cannot possibly be said to have been provided for by the contract between the parties on a proper construction of its terms, there is an error of law patent upon the face of the award which entitles the Court to set it aside

It is entirely opposed to the general provisions of the Contract Act and to the Common Law that a buyer who has rightly rejected goods tendered under a contract of purchase and sale should be in any way liable to the seller.

Per Heaton, J.—Where an award imports by reference the contract rules and correspondence between the parties and then contravenes one of the rules, it can properly be said that there is an error of law patent on the face of the award. B JIVRAJ BALOO SPINNING AND WEAVING CO., LTD. v. CHAMPSEY BHARA AND CO., 21 BOM. The fact that an award duly signed by the arbitrators is not stamped, does not affect its original validity.

A valid award ordinarily operates to merge and extinguish all claims raised in the submission, and after the award has been made, the submission and the award are the only basis by which the rights of the parties are governed and constitute a bar to any action on the original cause of action.

Arbitration and award—contd.

Where a party contests the validity of an award, the onus is on him to prove that the award is bad.

An agreement to recognise any award the arbitrators might make, even though it is beyond the scope of the disputes mentioned in the reference, is binding on the parties to the reference.

The ordinary rule that, as the submission only refers to the arbitrator the question between the parties, the moment he touches the interests of a stranger his authority and his award are void, can have no application to cases of partition of joint family property.

Where the parties by their conduct and by the terms of the reference show that the arbitrators are at liberty to get information from one or all of them without there being necessarily a formal meeting with all the three parties present, it is not open to a party to object to the award that it was passed ex parte and without just cause.

Where arbitrators are expressly authorised to proceed with or without making inquiries, and to arrive at a decision in whatever way they like, it is open to them to take into consideration a document purporting to be the draft of a Will unsigned by the testator and to regard it as a genuine and valid document.

A party who seeks to upset an award, and who fails to do so, cannot claim a decree on a ground which is quite inconsistent with his plaint. S RAMCHAND GURDASMAL v. GOBINDRAM GURDASMAL, 13 S. L. R. 75 337

Where a person is asked to act as mediator in the settlement of a dispute, and records a settlement agreed on by the parties, his act is not that of an arbitrator, and the record made by him is not an award, and if that record is at all operative, it is so only as a contract as between those who have signed it. It can have no operation whatever against a person who never joined in it

Where there is a contract for sale or exchange of land, no decree for possession can be given unless the title is completed by specific performance of the contract

A plaint in a suit for possession can be amended by the addition of a prayer for specific performance of the contract by the execution of a conveyance by the defendant.

The amendment can be allowed even by a Court of Appeal if the evidence on which a decree can be passed on the plaint as amended, is before the Court or can be easily obtained and the defendant can be compensated by costs for any prejudice he may have sustained or may sustain.

Assam Land Revenue Regulation (I of 1886), ss 23, 154—Deputy Commissioner, whether has power to settle boundary dispute coming to his knowledge otherwiser than in course of settlement proceeding—Civil Court, whether can entertain suit regarding boundary dispute in respect of which Deputy Commissioner has passed order—Jurisdiction of Civil Court, when ousted

In order to give a Settlement Officer jurisdiction under section 3 of the Assam Land Revenue Regulation there must be a report by a Survey Officer concerning a boundary dispute that has come to his knowledge in the course of his survey. The Regulation gives a Deputy Commissioner no power to settle a dispute which arises long after the settlement proceedings and which comes to his knowledge on an application from one of the parties concerned.

Where the order of a Deputy Commissioner deciding a boundary dispute on the application of one of the parties concerned does not appear to be one which is final by reason of its having been passed under section 23 of the Assam Land Revenue Regulation, nor does the order show under what section the Deputy Commissioner purported to act, the Civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit regarding the dispute.

The question whether the Civil Court has jurisdiction or not depends on whether the order of the Deputy Commissioner was or was not passed under section 23 of the Regulation. C RAM KUMAR v. CHANDRA KANTA 529

Benami transaction—Burden of proof—Court, duty of.

In matters of benami transactions, it is essential for Courts of law to take care that their decisions rest not upon suspicion, but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony At the same time, the Courts ought not to approach such transactions with that scrupulous rigour which in other systems of jurisprudence may demand the existence of the clearest possible evidence that the ex facie owner of property is a trustee for or holds the same for the interest of another. Even a silght quantity of evidence will suffice for the purpose of showing that the transaction was a sham The person who impugns the apparent character of a transfer must, however, show something or other to establish that it is a benami or sham transaction.

W. hypothecated among other properties, a share in a certain mauza. The mortgagee obtained a decree on the bond against W. and some of the mortgaged properties were sold, including the share in the mauza, which was purchased by B, the wife of W. who obtained possession and continued to receive the rents and the profits up to the time of her death. Shortly before her death she bequeathed this property to M., the appellant, and he obtained possession of it. After the deaths of B and the mortgagee, the present suit was brought for a declaration that the share in the mauza never belonged to B., but remained W.'s, B.'s purchase being a simulate transaction, and that the property was held in her name benami for W The High Court decreed the claim and M, the devisee of B., appealed to the Privy Council:

Held, that plaintiff had entirely failed to prove that B.'s. ownership was benami for W. and that the fact of the action having been brought after years of possession and when the principal parties to the transaction challenged and also the mortgagee were dead was a circumstance not without weight in such cases and involved a certain addition to that duty or onus of proof which in benami cases undoubtedly rested upon the assertor. P C MUHAMMAD MAHBUB ALI KHAN v. BHARAT INDU, (1919) M. What section 14 of the Bengal Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act of 1869 requires is that not less than three months' notice should be given if the landlord intends to enhance the rent of an under-tenant or a raiyat. It cannot be held that a notice which gives over nine months is a notice which fails to comply with the provisions of that section.

The object of section 29 of the Bengal Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act of 1869 is that a suit for enhancement should not be brought without previous due notice But it does not follow that when a notice under that section is once given, the suit for enhancement of rent cannot be brought two or three years afterwards. C ABHOYESWARI DEBI v. BANGSHIRAM RAJBANSHI 52

Rule 17 of the rules framed by the Local Government under the Bengal Municipal Act to regulate Municipal elections is not a mandatory rule, and an election is not necessarily void because of an infringement of that rule. But the burden rests upon those who maintain the validity of an election, notwithstanding an infraction of the rule, to show that the result was not affected by the infringement.

Where owing to a transgression of the rule more than one-half of the constituency did not vote at an election and it was not shown that the result of the election had not in fact been affected, the election was set aside as contrary to law.

The ordinary rule is that costs are borne by the unsuccessful party, but when an election suit is caused by the conduct of the returning officer, each party may, in the discretion of the Court, be ordered to pay his own costs. C SHYAM CHAND v. CHAIRMAN OF THE DACCA MUNICIPALITY, 30 C. Resident hereditary cultivators, to whom the proviso to section 11 of the Bengal Patni Regulation of 1819 is applicable, are not liable to pay higher rent on proof of the condition on which their rent is liable to enhancement under the Bengal Tenancy Act. Such tenants are not liable to pay any rent in excess of their engagements with the previous patnidar, unless such engagements are cancelled on the ground that they were not made in good faith.

The acceptance of a lease by a resident hereditary cultivator fixing the rent payable by him in perpetuity does not take away the status which he had as resident hereditary cultivator so as to make the rent payable by him enhanceable under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

In the absence of a lease proving a bona fide engagement made with the tenant by the previous patnidar fixing the former's rent, the tenant as a resident and hereditary cultivator gets no protection from the proviso to section 11 of the Bengal Patni Regulation.

Where a putnidar can only enhance the rent of his tenants by special procedure under the Patni Regulation, he cannot do so by an entirely different procedure under the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Where tenants hold land under a lease fixing the rent payable by them in perpetuity, the fact that they have allowed themselves to be entered in the Record of Rights as occupancy tenants does not put an end to their rights under their leases nor does their action amount to estoppel. C RAKHAL CHANDRA CHATTERJEE v. BHABADEB CHATTERJI 271

Where during the subsistence of a tenancy the tenant attorns to a third person, he becomes liable to eviction at the option of the landlord; but until the landlord indicates his intention to put an end to the tenancy, the mere act of attornment to a third person does not transfer possession from the landlord to the third person. C HARI KANTA DAS BARMAN v. BIBI NURANNESSA 625

In such cases the whole rent due must, in the nature of things, be always a matter of speculation for the plaintiff and he is entitled to assert that he believes that his share of the rent due is the entire rent due and ask the Court to decide on the accuracy of that belief, if and when the impleaded co-sharers appear and claim any arrears as due to themselves If his belief is accurate, the Court will give him a decree for his share of the rent only as being the entire rent due, if inaccurate, the Court will investigate and decree the arrears due to the impleaded co-sharers as well. Pat RAM DHYAN SINGH v. PARDIP SINGH, 4 P. The defendants appealed and contended that their possession having become wrongful after the expiry of one year when the tenancy was determined, the suit was barred by limitation under Article 139 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act and that they had acquired by prescription the status of perpetual sub-lessees:

Held, applying the principle of section 116 of the Transfer of Property Act, that the payment of rent by the defendants and the acceptance of the same by the plaintiff resulted in the renewal of the lease every year until disputes arose and as the suit was instituted within two years of such disputes, it was not barred under Article 139 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act.

An order of Court sanctioning a compromise on behalf of a minor party need not on the face of it state in so many words that the Court has considered the terms of the settlement and has come to the conclusion that the settlement is in the interests of the minor.

An endorsement of Court on the petition to sanction the compromise, which sets forth that the compromise is in the minor's interests, to the effect that the petition is granted is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of section 462 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882

If a compromise is binding, it operates as a bar to the trial of any question forming the subject-matter of the compromise.

If a Court sanctions an arrangement but some of its provisions cannot be embodied in the decree because they do not relate to the suit, those provisions can be enforced against the minors though not by way of execution of the compromise decree.

Where in pursuance of a compromise a sale of the minor's properties is effected by the father and also the guardian ad litem of the minor, the sale is good, though the guardian ad litem may not have the power to act on behalf of the minor

A charge in excess of the prior dry rent for water taken by the tenant is not an enhancement of rent.

Where water is taken by the tenant with the permission of the landlord to irrigate his dry lands, it is only reasonable to infer a contract between the parties that the landlord shall be entitled to a reasonable compensation for the water.

Where the tenant utilises the water for less remunerative crops as cotton, chillies, etc., and sarasari has usually been levied in the past, the levy is not illegal.

While mere length of payment will not make a cess, which is purely voluntary or which, on its face, is illegal, acquire a binding character, payment during a long course of years will be presumptive evidence that the payment of a cess had a legal origin, if the cess is of such a nature that a contract to pay it may be reasonably inferred.

A notification declaring that certain property or the area wherein it is situate is transferred from the jurisdiction of one Court to that of another, must be read as speaking retrospectively and as declaring that from and after its date, the former Court ceased to have jurisdiction over the subject-matter.

Where a Court which issued an order of attachment of certain property had been deprived of jurisdiction over the property but it ordered the sale of the property notwithstanding, the judgment-debtor not objecting:

Held, ( ) that the purchaser at the sale acquired no title to the property and that a purchaser at a sale ordered subsequently by the Court to which the jurisdiction over the property was transferred was entitled to possession.

(2) that the fact that the judgment-debtor did not object to the purchase by the plaintiff, however, it might bind the former, did not create any estoppel against an auction-purchaser at a sale held by the right Court.

Section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act only provides that a transfer from an ostensible owner confers title on the transferee. Where title is ostensibly in a person and the real owner further acknowledges the title as true, persons who seek to prove that the title is illusory will not be permitted to do so. What is denied is the right to adduce evidence that the prima facie title is not the real title. The principle does not apply to execution creditors, who are not, under all circumstances, estopped by considerations affecting the judgment-debtor.

It is not a general rule of law that an order for sale by a Judge who has no jurisdiction to direct it can be upheld on the ground that the judgment-debtor did not oppose it. The justification for such a rule of estoppel is the legislative provision in that behalf. That provision must be regarded as an exception to the general rule that orders passed without jurisdiction are nullities This exceptional rule of estoppel should not be extended further than is warranted by its language

Sections 18 and 21 of the Civil Procedure Code do not bind in terms persons like execution creditors. M VEERAPA CHETTI v. RAMASWAMI CHETTI, 26 M. L. T. 271; 37 M. L. J. 442; 43 M. 135; 11 L. W. 232 579

(Authorities reviewed).

Per Wallis, C. J.—The re-drafting and re-arrangements of the sections of a Statute leave the substance of the law unaltered, and such a serious change as the abolition of the decree-holder's right to apply in all cases to the Court which passed the decree in the first instance cannot be raised by implication, but should plainly and clearly appear on the language of the sections. The words "shall be deemed to include" is a phrase of extensive and not of restrictive jurisdiction, and it does not take away the right of Courts to execute decrees passed by them. The case of direct application to the Court to which the area has been transferred is met by the enactment of the new section 150 in the Civil Procedure Code, which is in terms wide enough to authorise that Court to entertain in the first instance any application which might have been made to the Court which passed the decree.

The tendency of Indian Courts to resort unnecessarily to American decisions deprecated.

Per Ayling, J.—Section 150, Civil Procedure Code, covers the case of the transfer of all the litigations arising out of a tract of country from one Court to another, and section 37 of the Code whatever it means by ceasing to have jurisdiction to execute, does not operate to exclude the Court which actually passed the decree and to substitute for it another Court and it is still open to the decree-holder to apply to the former for execution by way of transmission of the decree to the Court which has territorial jurisdiction.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—There seems to be no distinction in principle between jurisdiction to entertain an application for sale of property outside the jurisdiction and jurisdiction to execute the decree by sale of such property. Section 150 of the Civil Procedure Code would appear to have been enacted so as to take away both rights from the Court which ceased to have territorial jurisdiction.

Where questions of International Law or Commercial Law or Constitutional Law are involved, it is indispensable owing to paucity of Indian decisions) to refer to foreign decisions Where the Statute Law of India is silent and rules of justice, equity and good conscience have to be applied by Indian Courts and such rules have been clearly set out in famous decisions of foreign Courts, references to such authorities cannot conveniently be avoided. M SERNI NADAN v. MUTHUSWAMY PILLAI, 37 M. The right conferred by section 105 of the Civil Procedure Code is unqualified and by complying with the directions or findings of an intermediate order a plaintiff is not deprived of the right to raise in appeal the question of the propriety of such order and to attack its correctness.

Plaintiff sued for possession by partition of definitely marked portions of certain premises, but was ordered to amend his plaint so as to include the whole of the premises under the penalty of having his suit dismissed. He amended his plaint accordingly. The first Court held that certain parts were not liable to be partitioned. In appeal the plaintiff attacked the order directing amendment of the plaint. The District Judge held that by complying with the order the plaintiff had divested himself of the right to dispute any part of the premises being included in the property to be partitioned. The plaintiff thereupon filed a second appeal to the High Court:

Held, that the plaintiff's compliance not being a voluntary one, he could go behind the order directing amendment of the plaint and that the lower Appellate Court erred in not considering and deciding whether this order was correct. L SHAH JAHAN v. INAYAT SHAH 644

A person executed a security bond undertaking to produce the defendant in a suit at the time and place ordered by the Court, and that on his failure to do so, he and his property would be liable for the amount payable to the plaintiff. While the defendant was in Court conducting his case, the surety asked to be relieved from his obligation, but as the defendant was unwilling to surrender, the application was disallowed. Thereafter the plaintiff and defendant agreed to a consent decree which was put into execution against the surety. On appeal the District Judge discharged the surety from his obligation. On second appeal to the High Court:

Held, that in order to discharge the surety from his obligation it was necessary for the defendant to appear in pursuance of a summons or warrant, or to voluntarily surrender to the Court, and to submit himself to be dealt with by the Court as directed by Order XXXVIII of the Civil Procedure Code and that as the defendant was not before the Court in the manner above indicated and did not surrender, the surety could not be discharged.

Where a person becomes surety for the production of the defendant in a suit, the fact that the parties effect a compromise, instead of going to trial, would not relieve the surety of his obligation to the Court

The decision of one Judge on the facts before him, that sufficient cause has not been shown for the restoration of a suit, cannot provide a precedent for other Judges on similar applications.

On questions of fact or matters of discretion there can be no precedent. Each Judge is entitled to come to the conclusions he thinks right on questions of fact and in matters of discretion. B BILASIRAI LAXMINARAYAN v. CURSONDAS DAMODARDAS, 21 BOM. L. R 952 252

——— s. 151, O. IX, r. 13—Application to set aside ex parte decree—Jurisdiction to vacate decree apart from provisions of rule—Inherent power of Court, scope of, extent of.

A Court has no power apart from the provisions of rule 13, Order I, of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside an ex parte decree made by itself.

Per Abdur Rahim, Offg. C. J.—Most of the cases where the Court exercises its inherent power relate to cases of an incidental or ancillary character, though it is not to be understood that the inherent power of the Court is limited to such cases, for that would be unduly limiting the scope of section 15 of the Civil Procedure Code. But there is no inherent power in a Court to set aside an ex parte decree by summary procedure and the power of the Court in that connection is limited to the circumstances mentioned in Order I, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code The inherent power of the Court should be exercised not capriciously or arbitrarily, but ex debito justitiæ on sound general principles and not in conflict with the intentions of the Legislature.

Per Oldfield, J.—Although statutory enactments, expressed in affirmative language, may sometimes be construed as having a negative implication, such implication must be a necessary and reasonable one. It is impossible to presume that the provisions of Order I, rule 13, of the Civil Procedure Code contain an imperfect statement of the law on the very definite topic with which the rule deals, viz., the provision of a summary procedure for the re-opening of ex parte proceedings.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—Section 151, Civil Procedure Code, must be construed, not as empowering a Court to exercise powers which it never possessed, but as preserving to it those powers which it has been in the habit of exercising and which, by oversight or failure to specify, have not been particularised in the Statute. The section has been introduced for the simple reason that no Code can exhaustively deal with the procedure for exercising every power which a Court of justice is competent to exercise, and the language of the section shows that it should be availed of only where a power which has been exercised has not been provided in the Code. M GADI NEELAVENI v. MARAPPAREDDI GARI NARAYANA REDDI, 37 M. Where an application for execution of a decree proves infructuous, and the decree-holder states that he no longer intends to proceed with it, the proceeding arising out of the application ipso facto comes to an end, and there is no necessity for a formal order striking off the application to terminate the proceeding.

An application to amend a previous application, though not in the form prescribed by rule 11 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, but which, when read with the previous application, supplies all the information required by that rule, should be treated as a fresh application, and execution should be directed to proceed.

The fact that a decree-holder has, by an erroneous order of the Court, been prevented from proceeding with the execution of his decree in accordance with law, would justify the bringing into operation of section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code So, too, where it is found that a plea advanced by a judgment-debtor of payment is dishonest, and was made with the intention of delaying the execution until the decree was time-barred C HARIDAS BASAK v. RAJ KUMAR DEY 111

——— s. 151, O. XLI, r. 23—Inherent power, nature and scope of—Appeal—Appellate Court, powers of—Remand, when can be ordered—"Preliminary point," meaning of.

Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code contemplates the exercise of powers ex debito justitiæ which are not conferred by the rules of the Code. But where a power is given expressly, the inherent power of the Court ought to be very cautiously indented upon.

An Appellate Court has inherent power to make a remand under conditions other than those mentioned in Order XLI, rule 23, of the Civil Procedure Code.

The words "preliminary point" in Order XLI, rule 23, of the Civil Procedure Code, connote a determination not affecting the merits of the case.

The reversal of a judgment with a direction to admit evidence improperly excluded, is not a disposal on a preliminary point. M ATHAPPA CHETTY v. RAMANATHAN CHETTY, 10 L. W. 359; 37 M. L. J. 636 417

The right to claim a set-off is one of attack as well as of defence, and in a suit for the recovery ot the balance upon the taking of accounts in which the defendant claims a set-off, he occupies the position of a plaintiff in respect of any balance claimed by him, and the plaintiff is not precluded from setting up the defence of limitation as well as any other defence to the attack of the defendant.

The term "debt" in rule 6 of Order VIII of the Civil Procedure Code means a present obligation to pay a liquidated sum of money, and, in order to constitute a debt, it is not sufficient that a sum of money may be ultimately recoverable.

Where, therefore, in a suit for the balance to be found due on taking an account of an agency transaction, the defendant in his written statement claimed that a balance was due to him on the accounts:

Held, that Order VIII, rule 6, of the Code did not apply, inasmuch as there was no ascertained sum of money claimed, the amount being made to depend upon the examination of the accounts, and the written statement contained no particulars of the debt sought to be set off

In a suit upon agency transactions where the defendant alleges claims against the plaintiff which he could have sued to enforce independently of the plaintiff's suit, but which claims were, at the date of the plaintiff's suit, barred by limitation, he cannot be permitted to plead these claims as a set-off against the claim of the plaintiff. M PANUGANTI NARASIMHA RAO v SRINIVASA JAGANNATHA RAO, 37 M. Held, (1) that Order XVII, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, applied to the case, and that the original order of dismissal was a legal order.

(2) that the negligence of the plaintiff's Pleader resulting in the non-appearance of the plaintiff was not "sufficient cause" under Order XVII, rule 4 of the Code for setting aside an order of dismissal for default.

Per Pratt, J. C.—Where the conditions laid down in rules 2 and 3 of Order XVII of the Civil Procedure Code coincide, the procedure laid down in rule 2 of the Order must be followed inasmuch as the consequences of non-appearance have a natural precedence over the merits.

Per *Fawcett, A. J. The appointment of a person as the guardian ad litem of a minor without that person's consent is not a valid appointment.

Where a minor is not properly represented on the record, he cannot be regarded as a party to the proceedings, and the result of such proceedings, therefore, cannot bind him: consequently there can be no question of his having been prevented by sufficient cause from conducting them. If in such a case an ex parte decree is passed against a minor, he cannot apply to set it aside under Order IX, rule 13, of the Civil Procedure Code

In order to attract the provisions of Order IX rule 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, relating to the setting aside of ex parte decrees, the person seeking the aid of the Court must be a party to the suit. It is of the essence of the rule that the complaint must come from one whose rights could validly be dealt with by the trial Court.

If in consequence of the failure to have a guardian appointed a minor defendant is not properly before the Court, any decree passed against him and any proceedings intended to affect him would be nullities The minor has in such a case, his remedy against the invalid act of the Court in quite a different proceeding, and not in a proceeding instituted to set aside the decree treating him as if

A consent decree provided that the defendant-judgment-debtor should deliver to the plaintiff a parcel of land and should raise a wall within a time specified in the decree. The decree further provided that the defendant, as soon as he had carried out the terms of the decree, should notify that fact to the Court. Within the specified time the defendant made an application intimating to the Court that he had complied with the terms of the decree. The application was received but no action was taken upon it:

Held, (1) that the application of the defendant did not fall under Order XXI, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code;

(2) that if the defendant had not faithfully carried out the terms of the decree, the proper course for the plaintiff was to apply for execution of the decree and the Court would then consider whether the terms of the decree had been carried out. C LIGRAJ PATJOSI v. MAHADEB RAM, 30 C. ——— O. XXI, rr. 15, 17—Execution of decree—Joint decree—One of several joint decree-holders, whether can apply for execution—Procedure—Amendment of application for execution, when permissible.

A joint decree cannot be executed by one of the several joint decree-holders in respect of what the applicant considers his share in the decree. Much less can it be executed by one of the decree-holders in respect of the entire decree, unless it is on behalf of the decree-holders for the benefit of them all. Even if the application for execution of the decree by one of the decree-holders be on behalf of or for the benefit of them all, it is for the Court to allow, for sufficient cause, the execution of the decree on such application, and in case the Court does allow the application and the decree to be so executed, the Court is required to make such order "as it deems necessary for protecting the interests of the persons who have not joined in the application."

The requirements of rule 15 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code go to the root of the execution of the decree itself, and, therefore, while rule 7 of the Order empowers an executing Court to allow a defect in the requirements of rules 1 to 4 of the Order to be amended, it does not include rule 15 of the Order, so that an application for execution of a decree which does not comply with the requirements of rule 15 cannot be allowed to be amended. Pat MEIK v. MIDNAPUR ZAMINDARY COMPANY, LD., (1919) PAT. 849; 4 P. The dismissal of an application for the sale of property attached in execution of a decree does not in any way affect the continuance of the attachment.

Where there is a subsisting attachment and a Court proceeds to sell the property in pursuance of that attachment, it would not be acting without jurisdiction if no notice is given of the application for an order for sale. The absence of notice is a mere irregularity and does not render the sale null and void. M VUPPU SITARAMAYYA v. MINCHULA GOPALAKRISHNAMMA, 10 L. W. 190; 37 M. L. J. 216; (1919) M. W. Order XXI, rule 67 (2), of the Civil Procedure Code merely provides that an executing Court may, in its discretion, direct an advertisement of a sale to be published in the Gazette, but there is no obligation on its part to do so, and the failure to give such a direction does not amount to material irregularity in the conduct of the sale within the meaning of rule [illegible] of the Order

A judgment-debtor applying under Order XXI, rule 90, of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside an execution sale must show not only that there has been material irregularity in the conduct of the sale but also that such irregularity has resulted in substantial injury to him.

Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

An execution Court should not consider objections other than those expressly stated in the application presented to it under Order XXI, rule 90, of the Civil Procedure Code. A fortiori, objections not so taken cannot be considered by an Appellate Court, when hearing an appeal from the order of the Court rejecting an application to set aside a sale. L GOPI CHAND v. BENARSI DAS 794

The words "where immoveable property has been sold" in Order XXI, rule 89, Civil Procedure Code, are not restricted to the actual interest that passes by the sale.

It is open to the holder of a mortgage on property sold in execution of a decree to apply under Order XXI, rule 89, Civil Procedure Code, to set aside the sale, even though his mortgage is admitted in the sale and the sale is subject to his right.

Where the decree of a Small Cause Court is being executed by an ordinary Court, an order made by the latter under rule 89, Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, is appealable to the District Judge, and the High Court can entertain an application under section 115 of the Code from the order of the District Judge. Order XLI, rule 27, of the Civil Procedure Code does not provide that in order to enable the Appellate Court to pronounce judgment in favour of a particular party additional evidence may be admitted in appeal. It only provides that where it is impossible to pronounce judgment at all on the evidence, the Court might admit additional evidence.

The legitimate occasion for the use of the power conferred by Order XLI, rule 27, of the Civil Procedure Code on an Appellate Court is when, on examining the evidence as it stands, some inherent lacuna or defect becomes apparent not where a discovery is made, outside the Court, of fresh evidence and the application is made to import it.

Where additional evidence is improperly admitted in appeal, the Court has no jurisdiction to direct the prosecution of a witness on the basis of such evidence and an order made under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code in such a case cannot be sustained. Pat JAGDEO LAL v. RAM LAGAN SINGH, 20 CR L. The object of Order XLI, rule 33, Civil Prodceure Code, is to enable an Appellate Court to pass judgments or orders which would give consistency to its decisions and although the power to interfere with an order against a person who is not before it should be exercised with great care and caution, the discretion of the Court to grant relief which benefits a partywho has not appealed is not hampered.

The principle that no decree or order should be passed against a person without hearing him does not apply where the non-appealing party is benefited by the order.

The illustration to Order XLI, rule 33, Civil Procedure Code, is not exhaustive of the scope of the rule

Where interference with a decree in favour of a party not before the Court is deemed necessary, the Court should implead him in the exercise of its plenary powers so that he may avail himself of the benefit of the decree in execution. M MUKKU VENKATARAMIAH v. MUKKU CHINNAIAH, 10 L. Held, (1) that the defendants who were debtors on the promissory note were creditors in respect of the money deposited as security and were, therefore, entitled to raise the plea of set-off.

A bona fide compromise effected to settle doubtful claims is not legally invalid because the surrender of a doubtful right by one party, and the forbearance by the other of his right to sue, form a good reciprocal consideration for such a settlement. An intending litigant, who bona fide forbears a right to litigate a question of law or fact which it is not vexatious or frivolous to litigate, does give up something of value, but there must be in fact a serious claim honestly made.

Where a person obtained from the Revenue Court a declaration that he was entitled to under-proprietary rights, but being misled by the opposite party who threatened to file a suit in the Civil Court to challenge the propriety of the finding of the Revenue Court, relinquished the under-proprietary rights conferred upon him, and accepted a kabuliyat and was subsequently sued in ejectment:

Construction of document—Intention of parties—Conduct--Mortgage by several joint owners—Transaction, whether divisible—Refusal of one to execute, effect of.

Plaintiff sued for a declaratory decree to the effect that certain land was liable to attachment and sale in execution of his decree against the defendants. It appeared that the land was released from attachment on the objection of K., who contended that it had been mortgaged to him. The mortgage deed was drawn up in favour of K and was to have been executed by three persons, who were joint owners in equal shares of the land in dispute. One of these three refused to execute it on the ground that it was without consideration:

Held, (1) that as the mortgage deed was not signed and executed by all three joint owners of the land, it was incomplete and conferred no rights whatever upon K.;

(2) that the mortgage was intended to be one single and indivisible transaction and could not be split up.

The construction to be put on a particular transaction must depend upon the intention of the parties as inferred from their acts and conduct. L KISHAN DAYAL v. RODU 813

Where upon an agreement of sale the vendee deposits a sum of money with the vendor, the deposit, unless paid on any special terms, is not merely part payment but is an earnest, so that, on the one hand, if the contract be performed, it is brought into account as part payment; on he other hand, if the purchase makes default, it may be retained by the vendor, and is thus a security for the performance of the purchaser's part of the contract. Section 45 of the Contract Act does not provide that when one of several joint creditors has been paid his share of the debt and has thus ceased to be a creditor, the remaining creditors cannot maintain a suit for the balance of the debt.

The words "as between him and them" in section 45 of the Contract Act signify that as between the debtor and the original body of creditors the right to claim payment would rest with that body, but if by part payment the number of creditors is reduced, the right to claim payment will be a right arising as between the debtor and the remaining creditors.

On dissolution of a partnership one-fifth of a debt due to the partnership from the defendant fell to the share of one of the partners, K. The latter sued the defendant for recovery of his share of the debt, impleading also as defendants his former partners who refused to join as plaintiffs, and obtained a decree. On the 1st February 1901 the putnidar instituted a suit for rent against the dar-putnidar for the period between May 1895 and January 1901. (2) that the claim of the plaintiff could not be postponed merely because accounts had not been taken of the possession of the plaintiff from the 17th November 1862, inasmuch as if a claim were now put forward for an account of this period, it would be successfully met by the plea of limitation. C UMESH CHANDRA DE v. JAKHOMAL MEHERA, 30 C. ——— s. 73—Damages, measure of—Lease—Failure of lessor to give possession to lessee—Assessment of damages, mode of.

Section 73 of the Contract Act lays down the principles to be employed in assessing damages and embodies the principles of English Law on the subject. The loss or damage must arise naturally in the usual course of things from the breach or it must be such as the parties knew to be likely to result from the breach. In estimating the loss, the means which existed of remedying the inconvenience must be taken into account.

In an action for damages for the lessor's failure to give possession of the lands leased to the lessee, the plaintiff is entitled to the primary profits he would have derived had he cultivated the lands in a husbandlike manner, i.e, the net and not the gross produce, making deductions for the expenses of cultivation and the failure of season, if any. The amount fixed in the contract cannot form the criterion for assessing damages, and the opportunities which the plaintiff had of renting other lands should be taken into account.

The possession referred to in Exception (1) to section 108 of the Contract Act is distinguishable from mere custody or possession held for a specific or limited purpose. It must be juridical possession or held under some right analogous to that of the owner or involving, expressly or impliedly, a power to sell, though the owner may have restricted the exercise of that right in a particular manner.

A person who obtains an article under the hire-purchase system does not become the owner thereof till a payment is made in full in pursuance of the agreement. Till such payment is made, he is only entitled to the use of the article in terms of the agreement and subject to the control of the owner.

Where a person holds a certain article on hire with an option to purchase, the nature of the possession and the powers of the person having it are determined by the contract of hire. When in such a case the hirer sells the article hired to another person, the owner is entitled to recover the same from the purchaser though the latter may have acted in good faith. O ALBERT v. SINGER SEWING MACHINE COMPANY, 14 U. The liabilities of a principal and his surety, though arising under the same transaction, are distinct, because the liability of a surety does not necessarily in all cases arise simultaneously with that of the principal, and it may happen that the remedy against the principal is barred when the liability of the surety arises. Section 28 of the Contract Act merely defines the measure of liability and has no reference to the extinction of the liability by the operation of the Statute of Limitation.

The rule of diligence among partners, in the absence of any specific agreement, is that they are not always obliged to use that middle kind of diligence which prudent men employ in their own affairs, they are secure if they act in partnership affairs as they would do in their own, so that if a partner fall into error in the management from want of a larger share of prudence and skill than he is truly master of, he is not liable for the consequences. Good faith is required in a partner as well as diligence and if a partner is guilty of gross negligence, unskilfulness, fraud, or wanton misconduct in the course of the partnership business, he is ordinarily responsible to the other partners for all losses and damages sustained thereby Pat SASTHI KENKAR BANDOPADHYA v. MAN GOBINDA CHANDRA, (1919 PAT 419 2

A Sub-Inspector of Excise entered the premises of the accused after sunset where he suspected contraband opium had been secreted, after entering the premises he sent for two search witnesses. A search was made and some opium was found The Sub-Inspector thereupon arrested the accused and took him to the Police station, but conducted the investigation himself and retained the opium found on the premises, which he produced in Court when he made his statement. He submitted a report and charge sheet, and the Deputy Magistrate of the District took cognizance of the case, treating the report of the Excise Sub-Inspector as a Police report, and convicted the accused under section 9 (c) of the Opium Act. On appeal the Sessions Judge upheld the conviction, pointing out that the Excise Sub-Inspector's report was wrongly treated by the Magistrate as a Police report, and that he must have taken cognizance of the case under section 190 (a) (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code. The accused moved the High Court on revision:

Held, (1) that the proceedings before the Magistrate were irregular, inasmuch as he was not properly in seizin of the case there was no regular complaint before him, and, even if there was, his omission to examine the complainant on oath as required by section 200 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was an illegality which vitiated the proceedings.

(2) that apart from the foregoing, the conviction could not be maintained by reason of the following serious irregularities committed by the Excise Sub-Inspector, namely:—

(a) his entry of the premises after sunset in contravention of section 14 of the Opium Act;

(b) his entry of the premises without search witnesses in disregard of section 103 of the Criminal Procedure Code;

(c) his keeping the investigation in his own hands and not delivering up the opium found to the nearest Police station, in spite of the peremptory provisions of section 20 of the Opium Act.

Where the right or possession of the parties is not free from doubt and there is a danger of disturbance of public tranquility on account of both the parties asserting their right and possession over the lands in question, it is inequitable to take action under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code to restrain one party as against the other, the virtual effect of which would be to usurp the functions of the Civil Court and to decide the right and title over the disputed land including the right of possession.

Where the right of a party is clear and there is a threatened invasion of that right by another party, a temporary order under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code might be useful and effective. Similarly under section 107 of the Code where parties are in the wrong, they can be bound down in order to prevent a breach of the peace. But where there is a doubt as to the right of the parties to be in possession of immoveable property, the only effective remedy is that provided by section 145 of the Code, under which if the Magistrate after due enquiry comes to the conclusion that one of the parties is in clear possession, he will uphold its possession until it is evicted in due course of law, and if on the other had the Magistrate finds it difficult to decide which of the parties is in actual possession, he has got a remedy to prevent a breach of the peace under section 107 of the Code by attaching the subject-matter of the dispute.

An order under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not fall within the scope of section 435 of the Code and can only be revised in virtue of the jurisdiction conferred on the High Court by section 107 of the Government of India Act. But it is only in very rare cases that the High Court will interfere under that section, even where there is a question of jurisdiction; if there is no question of jurisdiction, it would interfere only if very great miscarriage of justice would otherwise result.

In construing a judicial order it is an elementary principle that such construction must, if possible, be adopted as would make the order one in accordance with law, and not an order such as the Court making it had no power to pass.

Where, therefore, an order under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code specifies no time during which it is to be in force, the reasonable presumption is that the order would operate for two months and not for an indefinite time.

Under clause 3) of section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code an order may be directed to the public generally when frequenting or visiting a particular place, but it cannot be directed to the public indefinitely. An order addressed to "all and sundry" frequenting or visiting a particular temple merely means "all and sundry persons who frequent or visit that temple during the course of the two months next following the order." M PONNAPPA AIYANGAR v SRI VANMAMALAI, 10 L. Where a 1st class Magistrate passes a final order under section 148, Criminal Procedure Code, on evidence partly recorded by a Subordinate Magistrate under his directions and partly recorded by himself, he cannot be deemed to have acted without jurisdiction so as to call for interference by the High Court in revision.

The essential requisite to give a Magistrate jurisdiction under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, is that he must be satisfied that a dispute exists likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning land or water or the boundaries thereof. Once he is so satisfied, his jurisdiction is complete and his subsequent action must be considered in relation to procedure, not jurisdiction.

An enquiry by a Subordinate Magistrate, to whom a matter is referred under the provisions of section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is not confined to a mere inspection of the locality and a report thereon M VELLANKI SRINIVASA JAGANNADHA RAO v GOPALAKRISHNA RAO, 10 L. A previous order of a Civil Court relating to the property in dispute in a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code might throw light upon the matter, but the evidentiary value to be attached to such a piece of evidence must depend upon the particular circumstances of each individual case.

There is no inflexible rule of law that in a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate is concluded by every previous order of a Civil or Criminal Court: each case must depend upon its particular circumstances.

Per Huda, J.—Decrees of Courts, so far as third parties are concerned, may have different values in different cases.

In a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate cannot be said to have acted without jurisdiction simply because in making the order he went behind a decree or order of the Civil Court. C ATUL CHANDRA v. SRINATH LAIK, 30 C. Proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code are not within jurisdiction unless the procedure prescribed therein is strictly adhered to. A Magistrate who under section 190 (1) (a), Criminal Procedure Code, takes cognizance of a case on a complaint ought to examine the complainant before issuing summons. But his omission to do so is a mere irregularity and does not go to the root of his jurisdiction.

An order passed by a Magistrate calling upon a person to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under section 211 of the Penal Code, is neither in form nor in effect an order under section 202, Criminal Procedure Code. Such an order is not one under any provision of the Criminal Procedure Code and even where it leads to an inquiry by another Magistrate, it does not in any way affect the jurisdiction of the Magistrate who took cognizance of the case to summon the accused and proceed with the trial C BHAIRAB CHANDRA v. EMPEROR, 29 C. It is doubtful whether an investigation under section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code can be regarded as a judicial proceeding and may be used for supporting an order under section 476 of the Code.

Where a Magistrate did not himself give any reasons for holding that a complaint was false and did not record any evidence except the statement of the complainant, and proceeding entirely upon the result of the investigation, under section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code, ordered the prosecution of the complainant under section 211 of the Penal Code:

The Magistrate instituted proceedings only against some of them and after their conviction rejected the petition of the complainant to issue process against the remainder. On application by the complainant the District Magistrate under section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code ordered the remaining accused to be proceeded against. No notice was issued to the accused prior to the passing of the order:

Held, (1) that the order of the Magistrate refusing to issue process amounted to a discharge and that the District Magistrate had, therefore, jurisdiction to proceed under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code;

(2) that no notice was required to be issued to the accused inasmuch as they had never appeared before a Magistrate nor been formally discharged.

Where a reversioner joins a widow in a conveyance by which the widow sells her widow's estate and the reversioner his reversionary interest in favour of a reversionary daughter, the sale is good and operative and cannot be assailed. C BHOLA NATH CHOWDHURI v. HARIMANI DASI, 30 C. L. J. 6 42

The language of section 41 a) of the Factories Act indicates that what is prohibited is the employment of any person or allowing any person to work contrary to the provisions of the Act, that is to say, it is an offence to employ any person, or allow him to work, contrary to the provisions of the Act. Therefore, where several persons are so employed, the offence is complete and separate in respect of each person employed or allowed to work contrary to any of the provisions of the Act.

To such a case the provisions of section 71 of the Penal Code have no application, because the offence of each workman is distinct and separate and there is not one offence collectively merely by the fact of a number of these offences having been committed at the same time B EMPEROR v JOHNSON, 21 BOM. Hindu Law—Custom—Inheritance—Cessat ratio cessat lex, applicability of—Impartible estates, origin of—Acceptance of sanad inconsistent with family custom, whether destroys custom.

A special family custom of inheritance inconsistent with the ordinary Hindu Law may, if observed and acted upon, survives the primitive condition of things out of which it originally sprang.

One of the ways in which impartible estates may originate is by independent chiefs or feudatories being reduced in course of time to the position of ordinary zemindars, but such estates may also owe their origin to family arrangements followed up in practice for generations, whereby it was originally agreed that the family property should be impartible and be held and managed for the benefit of the whole family by a single member at a time in a certain order of succession, the other members being entitled to maintenance only. A family may expressly or impliedly agree to continue to observe such a custom, even though the conditions which at one time made it necessary have completely altered.

The mere acceptance by the head of a family governed by such a custom of a sanad from the Crown containing clauses inconsistent with the custom cannot destroy the custom or affect the order of succession which it prescribes. P C RAO KISHORE SINGH v. GAHENABAI, 15 N. A dedication in favour of an idol to be effectual must be real and not nominal, and it must be shown that the grantor completely divested himself of every portion of the property which is the subject-matter of the grant. Where there is no proof that the income of the property endowed is applied for the maintenance of the idol, and the whole conduct of the parties is inconsistent with the hypothesis of a valid trust, the dedication must be held to be nominal and where this is so, a subsequent grant made by a female having the estate of a Hindu mother cannot create a valid title in favour of the idol, and therefore, the idol cannot maintain a suit in ejectment.

A lease in favour of a firm or a concern must be taken to be a lease in favour of the individuals constituting the firm, and in the absence of anything to show that the original grantees are no longer members of the firm, there is nothing to prevent them from acquiring occupancy rights.

Certain land was leased to a firm: the lease expired in 1905, but the firm continued in possession of the land. On the 1st April 1915, they were served with notice to quit but they disregarded the notice On the 24th January 1916, the present suit was brought to eject them:

Held, (1) that the suit, having been brought more than six months after the expiration of the lease, was barred by the special rule of limitation prescribed by Article (a) of Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act;

The administration of a mutt, asthal or similar religious endowment in India must be not for the personal ends of the manager, but entirely for and on behalf of and in the interests of the institution itself. In whomsoever the ownership of the property of such institutions vests, the nature of the ownership is an ownership in trust for the institution itself.

It is the duty of the manager of such a mutt to refrain from the personal enjoyment of surplus income, and to add it to capital, and this is equally the case whether the title is in the gurukkal or spiritual head, which is the more common case, or in trustees.

The general case in such mutts is that the ownership of the property is vested in the mohunt or spiritual head. But this is not an invariable rule, and there are many exceptions depending on the constitution, usage and custom of the particular mutt.

It is sufficient to constitute adverse possession that the person now claiming to be owner should have stood by while others continued to possess not by derivative title but in practical contravention of his alleged rights It is not necessary to prove that such claimant protested against the violation of his rights, and that the possession went on despite such protest.

In suits to obtain control or management of a religious institution, when no misapplication is proved, and the defendant admits himself to be a trustee for the institution, the ordinary limitation of 12 years applies.

The ultimate purpose of the Inam Register, compiled in Madras in or about 1864, was to determine whether or not the lands comprised therein were tax free But the preparation of that register was a great act of State and the result of elaborate enquiries and though the statements as to tenure set forth in the register cannot displace actual and authentic evidence in individual cases, they are entitled, in the absence of such evidence, to very great weight. P C ARUNACHELLAM CHETTY v. VENKATACHALAPATHI GURUSWAMIGAL, 37 M. ——— Gift to female Presumption—Construction of document—Absolute words of conveyance, effect of—Deed purporting to be sale in consideration of unpaid marriage present

Where the words of a gift are capable of conferring an absolute estate, the fact that the donee is a Hindu female will not detract from the grant. It is not necessary that there should be express words to the effect that no restriction is placed on the donee's enjoyment or words expressly conferring rights of alienation. It is enough if, from the whole tenor of the document, it can be gathered that the donor intended that the donee should enjoy the property absolutely. The presumption in favour of a limited grant arises only in the absence of such an intention.

A., a Hindu, by deed of sale conveyed to his wife, M., certain immoveable property, in consideration of a sum of money given on the occasion of his marriage for jewellery, but which sum was spent for the family maintenance. M. was put in possession with directions to cultivate the lands, enjoy them and pay the kist thereon. Some years after A.'s death M. executed a deed of gift of the property in favour of her daughter, and the present suit was brought by the reversioners of A for a declaration that the gift would not affect their reversionary interest. It was contended that the conveyance to M. was not of an absolute estate, but only of an estate to be enjoyed for her lifetime, and, therefore, she was not competent to make the gift:

Held, that the plaintiffs' suit must fail; the facts that the conveyance to M. was by means of a deed of sale and that the transferee was given the same rights as the transferor possessed himself, viz., the right of one possessing an absolute estate, were strong circumstances indicating that the intention was to pass an absolute estate and the gift; therefore, in favour of the daughter was not open to

Under Hindu law the mother is, after the father, the natural legal guardian of her minor daughter and she does not lose her right by remarriage in any case when such remarriage is recognized as valid by custom.

Unless it can be shown that the welfare of a female minor is being neglected by the mother, it is not permissible to appoint the paternal grandfather as guardian of the person of the minor and to allow him to remove the girl from the custody of the mother

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the consent of the sons of a Hindu to an alienation by their father may be inferred from their failure to object at the time to the alienation.

Where there is delay in impeaching an alienation by a Hindu father of the family property, the burden of proving that the alienation was not for a legally necessary purpose is upon those who seek to have the alienation set aside

A sale of a small portion of a joint Hindu family property to pay off a portion of a debt incurred for the purchase of new property may be justified.

A debt, which is only precedent to but not entirely disconnected with the subsequent debt, is not an antecedent debt.

Where a sale is effected by a Hindu father and the bulk of the consideration is found to have been taken for legal necessity, the sons cannot question that sale. O RAM NARAIN v. LALTA PRASAD, 6 O. L. J. 504 664

The question of custom is, primarily, a question of fact and in each case has to be decided with reference to the particular circumstances alleged and proved.

The most important criteria for determining whether a particular community has adopted and follows agricultural custom are,—

It is settled law for the province of Bihar and Orissa that a person who signs a document as a scribe must prove specifically that in signing as a scribe he intended to sign as a witness

In order to prove the due execution of a document, proof of attestation is necessary. Where the only witness to a document is the scribe, who deliberately elects to affix the word 'scribe' to his name in preference to the word 'witness', in the absence of evidence that he signed as an attesting witness, the document is not admissible in evidence.

Where debts are incurred for family necessity by the execution of mortgage deeds, the signature of the managing member of the family, as the guardian of any member who might have been a minor at the time of execution, would be sufficient to bind that minor and create a lien upon the minor's property. But a lien can only be created by a registered instrument, and in order to prove that the original instrument is a mortgage document, it is necessary to observe the provisions of section 68 of the Evidence Act.

An extra judicial admission by the managing member of the family may or may not render it necessary to prove the original documents against himself, but this would not relieve the mortgagee of the necessity to prove them as against the minor. Pat NAGESWAR PRASAD v BACHU SINGH, 4 P. ——— s. 90—Ancient document, - Presumption as to execution and attestation—Document, whether must be produced—Custody, proper, proof of—Interpretation of Statutes—Court, duty of.

The rule of presumption embodied in section 90 of the Evidence Act must be applied with exceeding caution in India, where forgery and fraud are not of rare occurrence. The necessity for such caution makes it necessary to give a strict and narrow, and not a loose and liberal, interpretation to the provisions of the law.

The Legislature, by the plain language used in section 90 of the Evidence Act, has limited the power of the Court to dispense with proof of the execution of documents relied on as evidence, to ancient documents produced in Court at the trial; and the Courts in India have no power to enlarge this legislative provision so as to apply it to cases clearly outside the enactment.

The law makes the production of the document a sine qua non for the application of section 90.

Every ancient document for which a presumption of due execution is claimed, must be produced before the tribunal which is asked to make the presumption in its favour, so as to place it in a position to see for itself whether it bears upon the face of it such indications as convince the mind that it is genuine or "betrays from some anachronism or other inconsistency" that it is a fabrication

(Authorities reviewed and discussed.)

It is the duty of a party, who claims that an ancient document should be presumed to have been executed, to prove by clear evidence the fact of custody, in order that the Court may determine whether or not such custody was proper

The execution and registration of a deed of sale in Berar in favour of a person who does not take possession of the property which the deed purports to sell, but leaves it with the apparent vendor, raises no presumption that the apparent vendee ever had custody of the deed for the purposes of section 90 of the Evidence Act

In interpreting Statute Law in British India the Courts must give effect to the plain language employed by the Legislature, even if it conflicts with what they conceive to be the policy or the intention of the law.

While the Law of Evidence is designed to render the utmost assistance in the discovery of the truth, it does not relieve against the necessity of giving legal proof, any party who may be unable to adduce evidence

Section 91 of the Evidence Act, read with section 99 of the Act, prevents a party to a deed in a suit against a third person from furnishing extrinsic evidence for the purpose of showing that the deed which purports to be a sale-deed is really a deed of gift.

When one member of a family transfers property to another member of the family and the transaction is a sham one designed to save the property from the creditors but not intended to transfer it to the transferee, any ostensible possession of the latter must be deemed to have been with the object of maintaining this design and it cannot be deemed to be adverse to the transferor.

The fact that the liabilities under the decree form the consideration for the compromise, does not prevent that compromise from being a new and independent contract which may form the basis of a suit and which may be proved by oral evidence, and such evidence would not amount to "contradicting, varying adding to or subtracting from" the terms of the decree. N RATANLAL v. ANWAR KHAN 527

Proviso 1 to section 92 of the Evidence Act only permits failure of consideration to be proved by extrinsic evidence as between the parties to a deed and when such failure is pleaded for the purpose of invalidating a document.

Section 91 of the Evidence Act, read with section 99 of the Act, prevents a party to a deed in a suit against a third person from furnishing extrinsic evidence for the purpose of showing that the deed which purports to be a sale-deed is really a deed of gift.

When one member of a family transfers property to another member of the family and the transaction is a sham one designed to save the property from the creditors but not intended to transfer it to the transferee, any ostensible possession of the latter must be deemed to have been with the object of maintaining this design and it cannot be deemed to be adverse to the transferor.

a compromise and in consequence certify the adjustment of the decree to the Court, whereupon the execution case is struck off on the ground that the decree is fully satisfied, the order of the Court is binding on the parties and there is no longer an operative decree in existence. The fact that the liabilities under the decree form the consideration for the compromise, does not prevent that compromise from being a new and independent contract which may form the basis of a suit and which may be proved by oral evidence, and such evidence would not amount to "contradicting, varying adding to or subtracting from" the terms of the decree. N RATANLAL v. ANWAR KHAN 527

Therefore, where several persons are so employed, the offence is complete and separate in respect of each person employed or allowed to work contrary to any of the provisions of the Act.

Hindu Law—Custom—Inheritance—Cessat ratio cessat lex, applicability of—Impartible estates, origin of—Acceptance of sanad inconsistent with family custom, whether destroys custom.

A special family custom of inheritance inconsistent with the ordinary Hindu Law may, if observed and acted upon, survives the primitive condition of things out of which it originally sprang.

In such a case the principle embodied in the expression cessat ratio cessat lex does not apply.

One of the ways in which impartible estates may originate is by independent chiefs or feudatories being reduced in course of time to the position of ordinary zemindars, but such estates may also owe their origin to family arrangements followed up in practice for generations, whereby it was originally agreed that the family property should be impartible and be held and managed for the benefit of the whole family by a single member at a time in a certain order of succession, the other members being entitled to maintenance only. A family may expressly or impliedly agree to continue to observe such a custom, even though the conditions which at one time made it necessary have completely altered.

The mere acceptance by the head of a family governed by such a custom of a sanad from the Crown containing clauses inconsistent with the custom cannot destroy the custom or affect the order of succession which it prescribes. P C RAO KISHORE SINGH v. A dedication in favour of an idol to be effectual must be real and not nominal, and it must be shown that the grantor completely divested himself of every portion of the property which is the subject-matter of the grant. Where there is no proof that the income of the property endowed is applied for the maintenance of the idol, and the whole conduct of the parties is inconsistent with the hypothesis of a valid trust, the dedication must be held to be nominal and where this is so, a subsequent grant made by a female having the estate of a Hindu mother cannot create a valid title in favour of the idol, and therefore, the idol cannot maintain a suit in ejectment.

A lease in favour of a firm or a concern must be taken to be a lease in favour of the individuals constituting the firm, and in the absence of anything to show that the original grantees are no longer members of the firm, there is nothing to prevent them from acquiring occupancy rights.

Certain land was leased to a firm: the lease expired in 1905, but the firm continued in possession of the land. On the 1st April 1915, they were served with notice to quit but they disregarded the notice On the 24th January 19 6, the present suit was brought to eject them:

The administration of a mutt, asthal or similar religious endowment in India must be not for the personal ends of the manager, but entirely for and on behalf of and in the interests of the institution itself. In whomsoever the ownership of the property of such institutions vests, the nature of the ownership is an ownership in trust for the institution itself.

It is the duty of the manager of such a mutt to refrain from the personal enjoyment of surplus income, and to add it to capital, and this is equally the case whether the title is in the gurukkal or spiritual head, which is the more common case, or in trustees

The general case in such mutts is that the ownership of the property is vested in the mohunt or spiritual head. But this is not an invariable rule, and there are many exceptions depending on the constitution, usage and custom of the particular mutt.

It is sufficient to constitute adverse possession that the person now claiming to be owner should have stood by while others continued to possess not by derivative title but in practical contravention of his alleged rights It is not necessary to prove that such claimant protested against the violation of his rights, and that the possession went on despite such protest.

In suits to obtain control or management of a religious institution, when no misapplication is proved, and the defendant admits himself to be a trustee for the institution, the ordinary limitation of 12 years applies.

The ultimate purpose of the Inam Register, compiled in Madras in or about 1864, was to determine whether or not the lands comprised therein were tax free But the preparation of that register was a great act of State and the result of elaborate enquiries and though the statements as to tenure set forth in the register cannot displace actual and authentic evidence in individual cases, they are entitled, in the absence of such evidence, to very great weight. P C ARUNACHELLAM CHETTY v. VENKATACHALAPATHI GURUSWAMIGAL, 37 M. ——— Gift to female - Presumption—Construction of document—Absolute words of conveyance, effect of—Deed purporting to be sale in consideration of unpaid marriage present.

Where the words of a gift are capable of conferring an absolute estate, the fact that the donee is a Hindu female will not detract from the grant. It is not necessary that there should be express words to the effect that no restriction is placed on the donee's enjoyment or words expressly conferring rights of alienation. It is enough if, from the whole tenor of the document, it can be gathered that the donor intended that the donee should enjoy the property absolutely. The presumption in favour of a limited grant arises only in the absence of such an intention.

A., a Hindu, by deed of sale conveyed to his wife, M., certain immoveable property, in consideration of a sum of money given on the occasion of his marriage for jewellery, but which sum was spent for the family maintenance. M. was put in possession with directions to cultivate the lands, enjoy them and pay the kist thereon. Some years after A.'s death M. executed a deed of gift of the property in favour of her daughter, and the present suit was brought by the reversioners of A for a declaration that the gift would not affect their reversionary interest. It was contended that the conveyance to M. was not of an absolute estate, but only of an estate to be enjoyed for her lifetime, and, therefore, she was not competent to make the gift:

Held, that the plaintiffs' suit must fail; the facts that the conveyance to M. was by means of a deed of sale and that the transferee was given the same rights as the transferor possessed himself, viz., the right of one possessing an absolute estate, were strong circumstances indicating that the intention was to pass an absolute estate and the gift, therefore, in favour of the daughter was not open to

Under Hindu Law the mother is, after the father, the natural legal guardian of her minor daughter and she does not lose her right by remarriage in any case when such remarriage is recognized as valid by custom.

Unless it can be shown that the welfare of a female minor is being neglected by the mother, it is not permissible to appoint the paternal grandfather as guardian of the person of the minor and to allow him to remove the girl from the custody of the mother.

A Hindu mother can effect a valid marriage for her daughter even in the presence of the paternal grandfather. L INDU v. GHANIA 783 ——Joint family—Alienation by father to pay off debt incurred for purchase of new property, validity of—Antecedent debt, what is—Legal necessity—Sons, failure of, to object at time of alienation, effect of—Delay in objecting, effect of.

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the consent of the sons of a Hindu to an alienation by their father may be inferred from their failure to object at the time to the alienation.

Where there is delay in impeaching an alienation by a Hindu father of the family property, the burden of proving that the alienation was not for a legally necessary purpose is upon those who seek to have the alienation set aside.

A sale of a small portion of a joint Hindu family property to pay off a portion of a debt incurred for the purchase of new property may be justified.

A debt, which is only precedent to but not entirely disconnected with the subsequent debt, is not an antecedent debt.

Where a sale is effected by a Hindu father and the bulk of the consideration is found to have been taken for legal necessity, the sons cannot question that sale. O RAM NARAIN v. LALTA PRASAD, 6 O. L. J. 504 664

————Separation—Intention to separate, effect of.

The unequivocal and unmistakeable manifestation by a member of a joint Hindu family, by his words or conduct, of a fixed or determined intention to become separate is sufficient to effect the separation of his title and the severance of his interest, although division of possession, or partition by metes and bounds, does not take place, or though there be no separation in food and dwelling.

A separating member of such a family may of his own free will accept as his share as small a portion of the joint property as seems good to him, and renounce all claims to the rest. P AMRITRAO v. MUKUNDRAO, 15 N. L. R. 165 866 ——Marriage—Asura form—Presumption—Parisam, whether bride price—Custom of community.

The payment of parisam at the time of marriage as between Hindus does not necessarily constitute it as bride price or render the marriage one in the Asura form. The real test is whether in the community or among the parties the payment of parisam is tacitly understood as being substantially a payment for taking the girl in marriage.

If any money paid by the bridegroom is utilised for the benefit of the bride, it should not be treated as bride price.

Ordinarily, the presumption is, whatever may be the caste to which the parties belong, that a marriage should be regarded as being in the Brahma form, unless it can be shown that it was in the Asura form. M GABRIELNATHASWAMI v. VALLIAMMAI AMMAL, 10 L. W. 491; 26 M. L. T. 348; (1920) M. W. N. 158 423

Under the Hindu Law the female natural guardian of a minor is not justified in disposing of the property of the minor merely because she wishes to live with her relatives so as to obtain their help in managing the ancestral properties. The fact that her relatives and those of the minor advise her to do this would not make any difference.

Where the guardian ad litem of a minor is guilty of negligence in conducting the defence on behalf of the minor, a decree obtained by the plaintiff would not bind the minor, nor would it operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit brought by the minor.

Although in matters of pure contract or transfer of property a minor cannot be held to be estopped by his conduct within the meaning of section 115 of the Evidence Act, yet when he enters into possession of property on a lease obtained on his behalf by his guardian, he cannot be allowed to set up his title to the property as a bar to a suit in ejectment on the expiry of the lease. M PONNUSWAMI PILLAI v. SUBRAMANIA PILLAI 412

There is no rule of Hindu Law that a father cannot separate himself without disrupting the joint family. He can leave the family after taking his own share, just as any other co parcener who is not a father can do When, therefore, a man becomes divided from his father, his sons retain a joint status with the latter.

By a deed of partition one S., his son and grandson as representing one branch and his brother Sevu and his sons and grandsons as representing the other branch effected a division of their family properties, the reason being that U, the son of S, was leading an extravagant life. The properties were divided into two shares; one share was allotted to Sevu's branch and one-twelfth out of the other share was given to U. and the rest to S. and the son of U. The share of U. alone was specified:

Held, that both by law and by the construction of the document S. and his grandson, i. e., the son of U. did not become separated inter se. M RAJAGOPALA AIYANGAR v. SINGARAVELU THEVAN, 10 L. W. 438; (1919) M. W. N. 800 590

The rule of Hindu Law which prevents a person born blind from claiming interest along with his brothers as a co-owner in ancestral properties has become obsolete and cannot be enforced.

(Authorities considered

A mere contingent Hindu reversioner is entitled to sue, under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, for a declaration as to the limited nature of the widow's title to her husband's properties where there is a Will giving absolute rights to the widow. It is not necessary, to found a cause of action under the section, that the widow should actively set up her title. The setting up by the widow of an authority to adopt, however, is not sufficient to found a cause of action for the reversioner.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—The exclusion of a blind man from inheritance was not based on his incapacity to perform Vedic ceremonies.

A rule becomes obsolete owing to change of time and circumstances, and the strict rules in the older Smritis have to be relaxed in this Kaliyuga owing to such changes.

If a rule of law has become obsolete, a Judge is not prevented from laying down the law as it exists merely because the obsolete rule is socially unjust and his decision negativing the old rule would also promote social reform and justice As regards questions of Hindu Law, extreme conservatism is not to be commended so long as the Legislature is slow to move in the direction of recognising that customs have become obsolete or do require alterations.

Per Napier, J.—In archaic conditions of life a blind man could not take his share in cultivation and in the protection of the family. It was, therefore, not unnatural that he should be excluded from a share in the property. In modern days, however, owing to improved methods of education there is nothing to prevent a person born blind from being taught how to transact business and to take his proper share in the responsibility of family affairs, and there is, therefore, no reason why such a disqualification should still continue. M YELLAVAJHULA ——— ———, alienation by—Reversioner joining in alienation, effect of—Necessity, proof of—Presumption—Burden of proof—Reversioner, right of, nature of—Estoppel.

The circumstance that a conveyance of a portion of her husband's estate is executed jointly by a Hindu widow and the then next reversioner, does not by itself create an indefeasible title in favour of the vendee, who can successfully resist a claim by the reversioners only on proof of legal necessity or such bona fide inquiry as entitles him to protection from a Court of Equity. A mere recital in the deed as to the existence of such necessity, by itself, is insufficient. Where, however, the alienation is made with the concurrence of, or jointly with, the then next reversioner, there is a presumption in favour of the validity of the transaction.

In order to discharge the burden of proving the existence of legal necessity, the true rule is that the creditor, to protect himself, where he is not shown to have made a bona fide inquiry, must prove that there was an actual pressure on the estate or danger to be averted, such as a threatened suit on a genuine debt, an outstanding decree or an impending sale, which the widow had no funds to meet.

Where persons contesting an alienation by a Hindu widow claim not through their father but directly as reversioners to the estate of the last male owner, they are not precluded by any rule of estoppel from disputing the validity of the alienation, nor are they affected by the circumstance that they had, after the death of their father and before the death of the widow, taken by inheritance land transferred by the widow by way of gift to their father. C RAMES CHANDRA CHAKRABARTI v SASI BHUSAN UPADHAY, 30 C. ——— ———, estate of Renunciation by widow, how effected—Surrender, validity of.

A Hindu widow can renounce her estate in favour of the nearest reversioner of her husband, and can by a voluntary act efface herself from the succession as effectively as if she had then died.

Such voluntary self-effacement can be effected by any process whereby there is a bona fide and total renunciation of the widow's right to hold the property.

Where, therefore, a widow compromised with the reversioner her claims to her husband's estate, and the documents of compromise were drawn up on the footing, not that the widow surrendered her right, but that she admitted that it did not exist:

Held that the widow was precluded from asserting any further claim against the estate, and that such estate vested absolutely in the reversioner. P C BHAGWAT KOER v DHANUKDARI PRASHAD SINGH, 37 M. L. J. 512; 7 A. L. J. 1036; (1919) M. W. N. 560; 1 P. L. T. 1; 2 U. P. L. R. (P. C.) 27 347

Under a deed of maintenance a Hindu widow was entitled to get Rs. 60 as well as certain quantity of rice per annum, with the payment of which the properties mentioned in the schedule to the deed of maintenance were charged. The plaintiff, who was a purchaser of a portion of the properties charged with the payment of the maintenance, also purchased the right of the widow to receive the said sum of money and rice. Held, (1) that the plaintiff, having become a partial owner of the charged properties, was bound under section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act to apportion the money which he sought to recover as between the properties acquired by him which were subject to the charge and the rest of the charged properties;

(2) that the widow's claim under the deed of maintenance was not a mere personal right but was one which the widow had under a deed of covenant for which there was a charge on certain properties and that it was capable of transfer. C RAJAT KAMINI DEBI v. SATYA NIRANJAN CHAKRABARTY 587

———, mortgage by—Mortgagee, position of—Interest, high rate of—Reversioner, whether bound to pay stipulated rate of interest—Adverse interest, widow whether can set up—Widow, whether represents estate—Reversioner, whether bound by decree against widow.

A person who takes a mortgage from a Hindu widow ought to know that he is dealing with an individual who has ordinarily only a limited interest in the property which she proposes to mortgage, and if he charges a high rate of interest in consideration of the risk he incurs, that covenant cannot be enforced against the persons to whom the property ultimately goes after the death of the widow, even with regard to that portion of the consideration which may be found to be supported by legal necessity, unless the circumstances, attending the loan, indicate that the rate of interest charged was reasonable Ordinarily, per cent per mensem is a reasonable rate of interest in such cases.

A Hindu widow cannot set up an adverse title against herself or do anything prejudicial to the interest of the reversionary heirs of her husband, so long as she remains in possession in succession to her husband.

A Hindu widow cannot be deemed to represent her husband's estate so as to bind the reversionary heirs of her husband in relation to anything which she may have done herself to the prejudice of these reversionary heirs. She represents the estate as against strangers for the purpose of protecting or preserving it. Anything done by her for a purpose unconnected with the protection or preservation of the estate or without any legal necessity cannot bind the reversionary heirs of her husband.

A decree obtained by a mortgagee against a Hindu widow alone, on the basis of a mortgage which is found not to have been made by her for legal necessity, cannot bind the reversioners.

Where a decree is obtained against a Hindu widow alone on the foot of a mortgage which is found to have been made by her partially for legal necessity, it is not equitable to make the reversioners of her husband liable to pay the costs of the mortgage suit to the extent of that amount of the mortgage money which was taken for legal necessity. O BAIJ NATH v SHEORAJ SINGH, 6 O L. ———— Surrender by widow of her estate to reversioner—Provision for maintenance and residence, effect of—Requisites of surrender.

A reasonable stipulation for residence and maintenance contained in a deed of surrender by a Hindu widow of her estate to the reversioner does not affect the validity of the deed, provided the surrender is a bona fide one of the entire interest of the widow in the whole estate and is not a mere device to divide the estate with the next reversioner.

Per Oldfield, J.—The surrender which the law recognises is a surrender of the estate held by the widow as such and it will not be the less total owing to a reservation in her favour of a right of maintenance, to which she was not previously entitled as widow, even if that right be secured on part of the property comprised in her widow's estate.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—To make a surrender effectual, it must comply with the following requirements:—(1) it must be in favour of the nearest reversioner, (2) there must be no reservation, (3 it should be made bona fide and not as a device to effect a bargain between the widow and the reversioner. A provision for maintenance does not, in the least, affect the spiritual character of the surrender or derogate from its completeness. If a transaction is ex facie and in intention a surrender and reserves no portion of the property surrendered to the widow, the fact that the surrenderee agrees to provide for the maintenance of the surrenderor would not vitiate the transaction. M ANGAMUTHU CHETTI v. VARATHARA JULU CHETTI, 37 M. ——— Widow—Surrender of estate, validity of—Surrender in favour of secondary reversioner, with consent of immediate reversioner, effect of.

A Hindu widow can renounce her husband's estate in favour of the nearest reversioner, if there is only one, and in favour of all the reversioners nearest in degree, if more than one exist at the moment, that is to say, she can by a voluntary act part with her own title qua the estate inherited by her from her husband and accelerate the devolution in favour of the donee. A surrender by a widow of her husband s estate in favour of the secondary male heir with the consent of the nearest female heir can be treated as a joint surrender by both, the result being to vest an absolute title in the secondary male heir. O JANKI v. SUNDAR LAL, 22 O. The provision for the maintenance of a widow is consistent with the validity of a surrender of her husband's estate to the nearest reversioner.

If, however, the provision for maintenance is a cloak or device by the widow to divide the property with the reversioner or to secure large benefits for herself quite out of proportion to the maintenance that is legitimately awardable to her compatibly with her position and status in life, the surrender is invalid. M RAMACHENDRA THEVAR v. NAGAMUTHU NACHIAR 785

Section 100 of the Succession Act has no application to a Will made before the Hindu Wills Act came into operation, nor can section 101 of the Succession Act be invoked for the construction of Hindu Wills made before that section came into operation By reason of the saving clause in the Hindu Wills Act neither of the foregoing sections, though embodied in that Act, has any application to Hindu Wills

(a) to his wife during her lifetime;
(b) on the death of his wife, to his daughter or daughters then living, during her or their lifetimes:
(c) on the death of his daughters, to his grandson or grandsons then living, during his or their lifetimes:
(d) on the death of his grandsons, to his younger brother and nephew, or on their death to their descendants in succession.

In the case of (a), (b) and (c) the succession was not to be by right of inheritance, and in each case the properties were to be kept intact. The plaintiff, the widow of a grandson of the testator, brought the present suit, contending that the gift over to the brother and nephew of the testator was bad and inoperative, and that after the death of the testator's daughters, the estate vested absolutely in her husband and she was entitled to it as a Hindu widow:

Held, (1) that the bequest was not affected by the rule of remoteness and did not offend against the rule against perpetuities;

2 that the husband of the plaintiff, who was in existence at the time the Will was made, though not specifically named therein, took only a life-estate under the Will: and that the remainder rightly vested in the brother and nephew of the testator. C DAKSHAYANI DASSI v. AMRITA LAL GHOSE SARKAR, 23 C. The only distinction between a reference made under section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act and one made under section 30 thereof, is that the reference under the latter section is made solely on the question of title by the Acquisition Officer of his own motion, while the reference under the former section is made on the application of persons interested in the compensation money and not by the acquiring officer on his own motion. P HAZURA SINGH v. SUNDAR SINGH, 97 P. Where there is a question whether certain land is agricultural land within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the evidence of persons who have known the land for years and have taken part in the cultivation of it, coupled with a Cess Return in which the land is described as agricultural, would warrant the conclusion that the land originally was agricultural, and this conclusion is not contradicted by the fact that in a subsequent chitta the land is described as bastu land, nor is it inconsistent with the fact that a portion of the land is occupied by a homestead C ANUKUL CHANDRA CHAKRABERTI v. TUFANI SHEIKH 945

An agricultural holding is a personal right, not transferable unless expressly declared to be so by contract or by statute. In Berar there is no law which permits an annual tenant of an agricultural holding to transfer his right.

Under the Berar Land Revenue Code a tenant right is heritable and transferable as "property", but a transferee of a tenant right by contract who does not make any fresh contract with the landlord obtains only the right, title and interest of the transferor, and if the transfer is from a woman with a limited interest, his right to occupy the land would come to an end on her death or re-marriage N HAJI BEGUM v SHANKAR RAO PARBAT RAO 543

A mere possessory title is not sufficient for the maintenance of a suit against tenants, for a declaration that they are not under-proprietors, nor is the possibility of some danger arising in the future to the exercise of possessory rights sufficient for this purpose.

An application by tenants to the Revenue Court to be recorded as under-proprietors does not amount to an invasion of, or interference with, the rights of a person whose only right is merely to remain in possession. O ANNAPURNA KUAR v. SHAMBHU NATH, 6 O. L. J. 499 746

In a suit for rent in respect of the said jotes, the defence was that the defendant had not obtained possession of a plot of land included in the jotes and so there ought to be a suspension of rent:

Held, 1 that this was not a case of a demise by the plaintiff and the latter could not, therefore, be held responsible for giving possession to the defendant and the question of suspension of rent did not arise, although if the subsequent settlement was bad the defendant could set that aside:

2 that the plaintiff was not entitled to rent of the plot of land of which the defendant had not got possession. C PRAVAKAR MAJUMDAR v. UPENDRA NATH 564

Landlord and tenant—contd.

The word "ijara" has no settled meaning which would make its use inconsistent with the interest of a tenure-holder. The usual meaning of "ijara" is a lease for a term.

The general rights between the lessor and the lessee as laid down in the English Law would govern cases under the Bengal Tenancy Act, unless that Act contains anything to the contrary.

Where the terms of a lease give the lessor a right of re-entry in case of a breach of covenant in the lease, unless and until that right is exercised, a sub-lease granted in breach of the terms of the ease would operate as valid.

Plaintiffs brought a suit for recovery of khas possession of land, basing their title on a raiyati lease granted by persons who had obtained a lease from the superior landlord for six years and by which they covenanted with their lessor not to assign, underlet or part with any part of the parganah in which the land in suit was situate:

Held, that the plaintiffs' raiyati lease, even if granted in breach of a covenant in the head lease, was not void but voidable at the option of the head lessor and that a third party could not challenge the rights of the plaintiffs, who were entitled to succeed on the basis of their raiyati lease. In a mourasi mokarrari lease the rent was fixed at the rate of Rs. 1-6-8 gandas per year in cash in addition to paddy rent at the rate of 7 aris per year, and the price of the paddy was fixed at a certain rate per ari and taking the cash and the price of paddy together the total rent was stated in the lease to be fixed at Rs. 16-6-8 gandas. In the lease there was also a clause that there shall be no increase or abatement in the jama:

Held, per Curiam (Newbould, J., dissenting)—(1) that the lease being mourasi mokarrari the rent was a fixed one, and that the landlords were entitled to recover only at the rate of Rs. 16-6-8 gandas per year, as noted in the lease, as the total rent and not at any higher sum, though the price of paddy might vary from time to time;

(2) that the parties should be held to that which the yhad said in the contract and the Court should not speculate to arrive at the conclusion that the provision regarding the total yearly rent had been inserted merely for the purpose of registration fee.

Per Mookerjee, J. The Court will give effect only to such intention as the parties were able to express by the language used in the document, and it will not be concerned with any unexpressed intention which they might have entertained. The suggestion that the quantity of paddy deliverable might have been valued for the purpose of payment of the registration fee was a speculation for which there was no foundation.

To hold that the amount of rent would vary from year to year according to the market price of the paddy would be to destroy the character of the lease as mourasi mokarrari.

Per Newbould, J.—The recovery of paddy rent at its cost value as it varies from year to year is not inconsistent with the tenure being a mokarrari one. When the value of the paddy varies, the value of the cash may also be said to vary in comparison with the paddy

In the absence of any agreement in the kabuliyat to pay the total rent in cash, the statement fixing the total rent at Rs. 16-6-8 gandas can be taken as a statement added to the document for the purpose of fixing the stamp duty and the registration fee. An order refusing to restrain the defendant from prosecuting a suit filed by him against the plaintiff in a Court of a Native State is not a judgment within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court, and no appeal, therefore, lies against such an order under that clause.

Plaintiff sued defendant for the recovery of Rs. 825 principal and Rs. 44[illegible] interest on a bahi entry, alleging that the defendant owed him Rs. 725 on a previous bahi account, that that bahi had been lost and that Rs. 100 had been advanced at the time of the defendants signing the entry sued on. The Rs. 725 were made up of three items, viz, Rs. 150, Rs. 310 and Rs. 225 The 1st Court, holding that the items of Rs. 150 and Rs 350 had not been proved, gave plaintiff a decree for Rs. 325 with interest at 2 per cent per annum making a total of Rs 448-8-0. Both parties appealed. The District Judge wrote a judgment covering both appeals and dismissed the defendant's appeal and accepted that of the plaintiff, allowing him Rs. 825 principal and Rs. 264 interest. Separate decrees were given in the two appeals. The defendant preferred a second appeal to the High Court and attached copies of the judgment of the 1st Court, the two judgments in appeal and the decree in the plaintiff's appeal but no copy of the decree in his own appeal:

Held, (1) that the appellant was entitled to an extension of the period of limitation to the extent of the time occupied in obtaining a copy of the 1st Court's judgment;

(2) that inasmuch as no copy of the lower Appellate Court, decree in the defendant's appeal to that Court had been filed, there was no valid appeal in the High Court from that decree:

(3) that on the general principles of the doctrine of res judicata the present appeal was barred in respect of Rs. 448-8-0, inasmuch as the sum was directly in issue in the defendant's appeal to the lower Appellate Court;

(4) that the findings as to the items of Rs. 150 and 350 were conclusive and a mere alleged error in weighing evidence was not a sufficient ground for second appeal.

Evidence relating to an oral agreement entered in a bahi to pay interest is admissible under the 2nd proviso to section 92 of the Evidence Act, and the existence of such an agreement is a question of fact which cannot be considered in second appeal. L BHAN SINGH v GOKAL CHAND 137

Where a suit is undervalued and as a consequence of the undervaluation is instituted in a Court which would not have had jurisdiction to entertain it had it been correctly valued, the time spent in prosecuting the suit in such Court cannot, under section 14 of the Limitation Act, be allowed in computing the period of limitation applicable to the suit.

An order for the transfer of a suit from one Court to another under section 24 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be made unless the suit has been brought in a Court having jurisdiction.

A suit under Order XXI, rule 63, of the Civil Procedure Code, in which a transferee from the judgment-debtor seeks to establish his title to the property transferred, is in effect a suit to set aside an order passed under rule 58 of the Order and, therefore, the onus lies upon the person relying upon the deed of transfer not merely to prove that it was properly executed and that consideration passed but that the document is really what it purports to be and is not merely a colourable transaction.

The burden is not discharged by merely pointing to the innocent appearance of the instrument under which the plaintiff claims, he must show that the instrument is as good as it looks. ——— s. 15, Sch. I, Art. 182—Execution of decree—Order permitting execution subject to furnishing security, effect of—Stay of execution—Exclusion of time.

The appellant obtained a decree from the High Court on 4th July 1914, and on 15th December instituted execution proceedings and attached certain property belonging to the judgment-debtor. The latter, having applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the decree, petitioned the High Court in January 1914 to stay execution of the decree pending the decision of the Privy Council. On this application the High Court on 27th January 1914 passed an order directing execution to proceed upon the decree-holder giving security to the satisfaction of the executing Court for the due performance of any order made by the Privy Council. The Court, on 17th February 1914, fixed the amount of the security and called upon the decree-holder to furnish the same in one month. Owing to the inability of the decree-holder to provide the security the Court, on 25th March 1914, dismissed the execution proceeding. On 15th October 1915 the judgment-debtor's appeal to the Privy Council was dismissed for want of prosecution. On 12th April 1916 the decree-holder again applied for execution, but the judgment-debtor objected that the application was barred owing to the expiration of more than three years from the date the last step was taken, i. e., the 15th December 1913. The decree-holder contended that under section 15 of the Limitation Act, the period between the 27th January 1914, when the High Court made the order directing execution to proceed on the furnishing of security, and the 15th October 1915, where the judgment-debtor's appeal was dismissed, should not be computed in the period of limitation. The Court, being of opinion that section 15 of the Limitation Act did not apply as the High Court's order of the 27th January 1914 was not an order staying execution, held that execution was barred by limitation. The decree-holder appealed to the High Court:

Held, that the order of the High Court of the 27th January 1914, whatever the form of it, did in fact, in the circumstances, stay the execution of the decree that apart from any order, the decree-holder already had the right to proceed with the execution, and an order in form allowing him to do that which he was otherwise entitled to do unconditionally but imposing a condition which was impossible of performance and thereby depriving him of his right, was an order depriving him of the right, he otherwise would have had, to continue the execution proceedings, just as much as if the order had been one in form staying execution until the condition was performed and, as the condition could not be performed, the effect was to stay execution altogether; and that, under section 15 of the Limitation Act, the time which had elapsed between the 27th January 1914 and the 15th October 1915 should not be reckoned in computing the period of limitation

Article 89 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act is applicable to a suit for accounts by a principal against his agent, although there is an agreement by the agent to render accounts every year Article 115 of the same Schedule does not apply to such a suit.

The mere failure of the agent to render accounts on demand does not amount to refusal to render accounts within the meaning of Article 89 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. The question whether the failure of the agent to render accounts amounts to refusal within the meaning of Article 89, depends upon the circumstances of each case. C BHABATARINI DEBI v. SHEIKH BAHADUR SARKAR, 30 C. A suit for a declaration of his title to immoveable property by a person in possession as proprietor is not barred, if brought within six years from the time when the defendant attempts to oust him from the land, although a right to sue the defendant who had been recorded as owner of the property in the Settlement Record had already accrued and become barred.

Ordinarily, under customary law, sons, whether by the same or different wives, share equally, and, therefore, where a party alleges that the rule of chundawand governs the succession in any particular case, the burden of proving the custom of chundawand would be on the person who alleges it. P JAHANA v. WALI, 98 P. Where a person is in possession of property, it is not obligatory upon him to file a suit for a declaration of his title, unless the denial of his title by the opposite party has the effect of disturbing his possession or doing him other injury not capable of being remedied otherwise than by a suit for declaration.

——— ——— Art. 125—Alienation by Hindu widow—Reversioners, right of suit of—Limitation—Compromise by female owner, whether amounts to alienation.

There is only one cause of action for a declaratory suit for all reversioners, next and remote, and when that cause of action once becomes barred under Article 125 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, by the failure to bring a suit by any of the reversioners within the period fixed by that Article, no reversioner, whether in existence or not at the date of the alienation, can afterwards bring such a suit.

The compromise of a litigation entered into by a female owner, with rights over property, her title to which is disputed by the opposite party, the compromise recognising the disputant's title to the property, does not amount to an alienation of the property in the disputant's favour by her and the disputant does not hold the property thereafter under any new title derived from, or created by her.

The daughter of a Hindu widow brought a suit to set aside an alienation by her mother and the suit was compromised. Subsequently, the reversioners brought a suit impeaching the same alienation:

Held, that the period of limitation for such a suit was that prescribed by Article 125 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and that as the compromise by the daughter did not amount to a fresh alienation, no fresh cause of action accrued to the reversioners. M GADIRAJU SOMARAJU v. DANDU VENKIAH, 26 M. ——— Sch. I, Arts. 134, 148—Transfer by trustee or possessory mortgagee, effect of—Consideration—Good faith—Transferee, position of.

In determining whether Article 134 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act applies to a suit for the recovery of immoveable property transferred by a trustee for valuable consideration, the question of good faith is very material, for if the transferee has acquired the property from a trustee in good faith for a valuable consideration without having notice of the trust, he acquires an immediate title to the property under section 64 of the Trusts Act. But if he has not acted in good faith and has paid valuable consideration, he acquires a title after the lapse of the period necessary for extinguishing the rights of the beneficiary to follow the trust property in his hands, and to this class of cases Article 134 applies. To the former class no occasion for applying that Article arises.

The transfer by a possessory mortgagee of the mortgaged property as if it were his own stands, however, on a different footing If the transferee has notice that the transferor has no higher interest than that of a mortgagee, he cannot, by reason of any misrepresentation which had not the effect of misleading him or by dint of any collusive misdescription of the interest conveyed, acquire a higher right than that which the transferor actually possessed within his knowledge or curtail the period of limitation provided for a suit for redemption by Article 148, for no secret compact between two persons can affect or alter the law of limitation to the prejudice of a third party. Where the transferee purchases in good faith and for a valuable consideration without having any notice that the transferor had no higher interest than that of a mortgagee, Article 134 protects him from a claim by the mortgagor, unless the mortgagor enforces his right as against such transferee within 12 years from the date of the transfer. O MUHAMMAD ABBAS v. NASIBAN, 6 O. The direction in Order VII, rule 10, Civil Procedure Code is mandatory.

The plaintiff, as trustee of a temple in the Tanjore district claming to be entitled to both varams, sued to eject the defendants alleging them to be purakkudis or tenants liable to be ejected at will. The latter claimed occupancy rights and objected to the jurisdiction of the Civil Court. The Munsif decreed the suit, holding that the Civil Court had jurisdiction. On appeal the Subordinate Judge, without recording a distinct finding on the question of jurisdiction, dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the merits, holding that the land was comprised in an estate and that under section 6 of the Madras Estates Land Act the defendants should be treated as occupancy tenants:

Held, (1) that on the said finding the lower Appellate Court should not have assumed jurisdiction

but should have returned the plaint for presentation to the Revenue Court;

(2) that a distinct finding as to jurisdiction should have been recorded

The person seeking to oust the jurisdiction of a Civil Court in which an action has been laid should establish its want of jurisdiction

The non-maintainability of a suit on the ground of want of jurisdiction depends on the relief claimed and not on the plaint averments.

The decision of Ayling, J., in Muna Muhammad Rowther v Muthu Alagappa Chettiar, 44 Ind Cas 894; 34 M. L. J. 234; 23 M. L. T. 161; 7 L. W. 380, does not authorise a general presumption against occupancy rights in the case of lands belonging to temples in the Tanjore district, but only indicates the conclusion justified by authority in any case in which similar facts are found. In each case the Court must decide whether such facts exist.

Courts cannot refuse to consider terms in pattas and muchilikas negativing occupancy rights on the general ground of the tendency of land-holders since the decision in Chockalinga Pillay's case, 6 M. H. C. R. 354, to import such terms, but should consider each contract on its merits and with reference to the burden of proof

The use of vernacular descriptions of tenures in some places is elastic and the definitions of these terms derived from glossaries and works of reference must be accepted with caution as corresponding at most to their normal meanings and subject, in each particular case, to revision in the light of its circumstances It is because such terms are often used in different senses that attention to collateral indications of sense, in which they are actually used, is most necessary.

The term 'purakkudi' is ordinarily inaplicable to a permanent tenancy.

It may, however, be shown with reference to the evidence that that interpretation is inapplicable to a particular case. M AMBALAVANA PANDARA SANNADHI v. PICHAKUTTI ODAYAN, 40 L. W. 565; (1920) M. W. N. 163 308

Receipt of rent is possession which can be recovered in a suit. Where tenants are in actual possession, rival claimants to the property can sue for possession without impleading the tenants as defendants.

The position of an anandravan who gets an alienation of the tarwad properties is not different from that of a stranger. V of 1898), s. 9—Validity of oral bequests.*

The pursuit of trade does not come within the ordinary powers of a Malabar karnavan, nor is trade the chief occupation or kolachar of the Nairs of Moplahs of Malabar.

The members of a tarwad are liable for debts contracted by the karnavan in the course of a trade carried on by him, if it is proved either that the business was a family business or that the members consented to the trade being carried on for and on behalf of the family.

Though it is the exception and not the rule to find a karnavan conducting a trade on behalf of the tarwad, any profit that might be made by an individual by trading would, on his death, become part of the tarwad assets in the absence of a valid bequest by the deceased.

There is no presumption of law that properties acquired by one member of a tarwad in his own name belong to the tarwad and that is a matter which must be proved like any other question of fact.

The fact that the male members of a tarwad habitually pursue trade as their occupation would not in itself make the trade which an individual member carries on on his own account and which, on his death, is inherited by the tarwad, a family concern, unless the tarwad inheriting the assets of the deceased member's trade can be held to have

The junior members of a tavazhi are liable for a debt on a pro-note executed by the karnavan for current tavazhi expenses The creditor can sue both the karnavan and the other members of the tavazhi and obtain a decree against all.

An acknowledgment or payment by the manager, though not expressly stated to have been made or signed as manager, saves limitation also as against the junior members.

The authority to sign an acknowledgment under section 19 of the Limitation Act need not be expressly given by the parties sought to be made liable. The agency to sign can follow from the act of the Court or from rules of statutory or partnership law or the personal law of the parties

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J—When a promissory note is executed for money borrowed at the time of the execution of the note itself, the creditor cannot join two separate causes of action in the same suit on two independent heads of claim, namely, one based on the borrowing of the money the instant before the execution of the promissory note, and the other on the promissory note itself. Having regard to section 91 of the Evidence Act, two distinct causes of action do not vest in such cases in the creditor.

Per Spencer, J - On the pleadings in the case, the suit was based on the liability for the debt as evidenced by the promissory note.

A manager of a joint family or tarwad can acknowledge liability on behalf of the members whom he represents so as to extend the period of limitation against them as well as against himself. M THANKAMMAL VAYAMKAR AMMA v. KUNHAMMA, 37 M. L. J. 569 ... 878

Malicious prosecution, damages for, suit for—'Malice'—'reasonable and probable cause' proof of, requisites of Finding as to want of reasonable and probable cause, nature of.

So far as the Courts in India are concerned, a finding as to want of reasonable and probable cause in an action for malicious prosecution is a finding of fact and not of law

The expressions 'reasonable cause' and 'probable cause' are synonymous. Any distinction that is sought to be made, that in any particular case there might be probable cause but not reasonable cause and that there should be an absence both of probable and reasonable cause to sustain an action for malicious prosecution as if the two could be distinguished, is opposed to the rules laid down on this branch of the Law of Torts.

Whether it is called 'reasonable and probable cause' or 'reasonable or probable' cause, the meaning is reasonably probable cause, i.e., a cause which an ordinarily reasonable man, having knowledge of facts and the belief (arrived at in a reasonable manner) as to facts which the defendant then had, would be justified in considering as affording a fair basis for the opinion that a criminal offence has been committed by the plaintiff and hence as being a probable cause for the institution of criminal proceedings against the plaintiff.

The fact that a civil suit for damages was a better or more appropriate remedy has little relevancy on the question of want of reasonable and probable cause. A man is entitled to pursue any of the legal remedies in any order he likes.

There is no real distinction between legal malice and malice in fact. If a man has been reckless, whether the charge be true or false, that might amount to malice, but not recklessness in coming to the conclusion that there is reasonable and probable cause. M KASIREDDI CHINNAREDDI v. PATCHIPULUSU VENKATASWAMI, 26 M. A mortgagee who accepts a mortgage from a person cannot question his title to redeem the property upon payment of such sum as may be found due by the Court.

A suit for foreclosure, sale or redemption can be maintained by the person named in the mortgage-deed as mortgagee or mortgagor, as the case may be.

A usufructuary mortgagee was placed in possession of a property of which the area and the income were liable to variation. It was stated in the deed that the net profit of the property would be Rs. 110, out of which Rs. 80 would be set off against interest and the balance against the principal:

Muhammadan Law—Puberty, attainment of—Presumption—Burden of proof—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 106.

Under the Muhammadan Law although there is presumption that a girl who has attained the age of 15 years has also attained puberty, there is no converse presumption that a girl who has not reached that age has not attained puberty.

The fact that a Muhammadan girl below the age of 15 years has attained puberty is a fact within her special knowledge and the burden of proving that fact lies on her

In a suit by a Muhammadan husband for restitution of conjugal rights, the wife pleaded that the marriage was invalid inasmuch as consent was given by her father although she had attained the age of puberty and was, therefore, competent to give her consent. The lower Appellate Court found that the age of the girl at the date of her marraige was less than 15 years:

Held, that as the defendant relied entirely on the legal presumption to prove puberty and did not plead that she was entitled to rely on the physical fact of puberty if her age was less than 15 years, nor give any evidence to prove the fact of puberty, the presumption of puberty did not arise and she must, on the finding of the lower Appellate Court, be held to have been a minor at the date of her marriage. C HELALONNESSA v. RAJAB ALI 94 obtained with the consent, express or implied, of, or under an agreement with her husband or his other heirs, and such property would not be divided among the heirs until the dower debt is satisfied.

A vendee from a Muhammadan widow in possession of her husband's property for payment of her dower is entitled to retain possession of the property sold to him as against the heirs till the unpaid dower-debt is satisfied, but the sale itself is invalid and not binding on the heirs.

Per Abdur Rahim, Offg. C. J.—A Muhammadan widow can transfer a dower-debt as also her right to remain in possession as a means of realising that debt. It may be that she does not acquire all the rights of a mortgagee properly so called by virtue of this lien; for instance, she may not be entitled to sue for the sale of the property to realise the debt, or to claim a preference as against an auction-purchaser in execution of a decree passed on a mortgage executed by her husband, but to the limited extent that this right is recognised as security for payment of the dower-debt, there is no reason why it cannot be passed to a transferee of the dower-debt or transmitted to her heirs.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—The right to retain possession and to pay herself out of the proceeds which a Muhammadan widow acquires to realise her dower-debt is not of the same kind as the lien considered in English cases. It is more in the nature of a charge on the property, because the right to pay herself out of the income is incidental to the possession taken by a widow. M BEEJU BEE v. MOORTHUJA SAHIB, 37 M. A voluntary alienation by some of the heirs of a deceased Muhammadan in possession of the estate, for the purpose of paying the debts of the deceased, is not binding upon the co-heirs who do not join in making the alienation, but in view of the provision of the Muhammadan Law that the payment of debts takes precedence over the inheritance, such an alienation can only be set aside on condition of the claimants paying their share of the debt due by the person through whom they claim title which has been discharged by the sale. O AHMAD SHAH v. ABDUL SAMAD, 6 O. Muhammadan Law—contd.

Under Muhammadan Law the great-grandfather's great-grandfather's descendant in the agnatic line is entitled to succeed to the estate of the propositus as a residuary heir in preference to his daughter's son.

Agnates, however, remote, are entitled to inherit as residuaries in the absence of nearer agnates and residuary heirship is not confined either to the father's descendants or to grandfather's grandfather's descendants, but extends to the agnate descendants of a "true" grandfather, however high in scale.

The word 'grandfather' indicates, in Muhammadan Law, an ancestor in the paternal line, however remote.

The examples given in the Muhammadan texts are only illustrative, not exhaustive. M ABDUR SAMAD v. CHINNATHAMBI SAHIB, (1914) M. W. N. 710; 37 M. L. J. 509 873

The doctrine of cy pres, being in harmony with the spirit of the Muhammadan Law relating to the administration of charities, is applicable to India, and is applied when from lapse of time and change of circumstances it is no longer possible beneficially to apply the property left by the founder or donor in the exact way in which he has directed it to be applied but it can only be applied beneficially for similar purposes by different means.

A Court has the power to remove a sajjadanashin, or to appoint a new man in the office, supposing it to be one which truly involves the performance of the duties of a spiritual and religious character inseparably connected with the personality of the sajjadanashin, unless there is very strong and clear evidence of custom and usage by which it can be shown that if the sajjadanashin misconducts himself in his office he cannot be interfered with by the Court. The ordinary law of waqfs, with such modifications as may be required by the practice of the institution concerned or of similar institutions, applies to a sajjadanashin.

The performance of urs and fatehas is valid according to the Muhammadan Law, as administered in India, if these rites involve the distribution of food to the poor.

It is not open to the High Court to re-open any decision arrived at by it in an order of remand in second appeal, when the matter again comes up before it after remand. M SUJJADA SHAH v. SHAW HABIT, (1919) M. W. N. 662 677

——— ——— Family settlement by way of wakf, validity of—Test determining validity—Maintenance—Successive allowances in favour of unborn persons, validity of—Parties, whether can validate invalid wakf—Construction of document—Mussalman Wakf Validating Act (VI of 1913), whether retrospective.

A wakf created before the passing of the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act, in which the gift to charity is illusory and in which the chief, if not the sole object of the settlor, appears to have been to create a settlement in perpetuity for the aggrandisement of the family, is invalid in law. The test to be applied in determining the validity of such a wakf is whether there is a substantial dedication of the property to charitable uses at some period of time or other.

Statutes which are properly of a merely declaratory character have a retrospective effect. But the nature of a Statute must be determined from its provisions, and the mere fact that the expression "it is declared" has been used is by no means conclusive as to the true character of the legislation.

The Mussalman Wakf Validating Act is not a purely declaratory Statute and is not retrospective in operation. The language used in sections 3 and 4 of the Act leaves no room for doubt that the Legislature intended to make its provisions applicable only to wakfs created after the date of the enactment.

A scheme for the grant of maintenance allowances to the members of a family which is founded on and is intimately associated with wakfs that are invalid in law, cannot take effect. The assertion of the parties or their representatives cannot validate an illegal wakf, and the Court cannot be utilised for the enforcement of a scheme elaborately devised to carry out a plan of family aggrandisement under the colour of a wakf in contravention of the whole policy of the law.

Whenever a wakf is created, the ownership of the appropriator in the thing dedicated is extinguished and there is a detention of the thing in the implied ownership of God in such a manner that its profits may revert to or be applied for the benefit of mankind. Consequently it would be wrong to assume that a person creating a wakf, in which there is a provision for the maintenance of the members of his family, could ever have intended that such maintenance would be a charge upon the dedicated estate

The creation of a succession of allowances for maintenance from generation to generation in favour of unborn persons, which are not charged upon an estate apart from a scheme of valid wakf, does not appear to be recognised by Muhammadan Law

In a case under section 269, Indian Penal Code, the prosecution must make out not only that there was disobedience to an order of an executive officer directing the doing of a certain act to prevent the spread of an infectious disease but also that the disobedience was unlawful and negligent and had also the effect of spreading the infectious disease. The gist of the unlawful act is that there must be danger of the infection spreading. If care is taken to avoid the infection, the act cannot be said to be unlawful or negligent and no offence is committed under the section. The mere failure to carry out an order which could otherwise have been bona fide obeyed by the avoidance of the danger of infection, cannot be regarded as an offence under section 269 of the Penal Code.

The authority of a Pleader to compromise a suit on behalf of his client, does not extend to his effecting a compromise in respect of matters outside the scope of the suit.

Where property is attached before judgment, the fact that a decree is made in the plaintiff's favour does not determine the attachment, which continues in full force.

A question of law raised upon facts which are on the record, can be raised at any stage of the suit.

Where a decree is obtained in respect of certain property, and a suit in respect of the same property is brought by a person, who is not the representative of the judgment debtor affected by the decree, before the decree is put in execution and there are no proceedings pending in which an application under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code could be made, that section is no bar to the suit.

A was adjudicated an insolvent and an order was made vesting his estate in the Official Assignee. Three years after the date of this order A acquired a business and the Official Assignee, in view of the fact that no final order of discharge had been made, took possession of A's stock in trade and then restored possession and allowed him to continue his business on condition of his making payments for the benefit of his scheduled creditors. The Official Assignee then threatened to take possession and A filed the present suit to recover the sums which he had paid, for damages for trespass and for an injunction for the threatened trespass. Upon a preliminary objection being taken that as

(2) that the order of discharge operated from the date mentioned therein, and that A was entitled to the injunction for which he prayed.

A Receiver under the Provincial Insolvency Act is exactly in the same position as the trustee in bankruptcy The whole of the property of the insolvent vests in him and he remains the owner thereof until he is discharged, and in this respect there is a difference between the appointment of such receiver and one appointed in an action. The sanction of the Court, therefore, is not necessary to the institution of a suit against a receiver appointed under the Provincial Insolvency Act.

An Insolvency Court is justified in holding that a payment to a creditor made by a person, who at the time of such payment is unable to pay his debts, must be taken as a payment with a view to prefer that creditor, if it is established that the payment is made of the debtor's own accord not in the ordinary course of business, and without any sort of pressure being brought to bear upon him.

In any event if a man on the eve of bankruptcy makes a payment to a particular creditor, the presumption immediately arises that he makes that payment with the dominant view of giving a preference to that creditor over his other creditors

The provisions of the Punjab Tenancy Act in regard to the alienation of, and succession to, an occupancy tenancy may be overridden by an agreement valid according to the provisions of sections 111 and 112 of the Act

An agreement entered in a settlement record must be interpreted in a reasonable manner, and as a whole with due reference to all the provisions which it contains: it cannot be construed so as to give in perpetuity to an occupancy tenant, his heirs and assigns an unrestricted power of alienating his tenancy, unless such an intention is expressed in clear and unambiguous language, uncontradicted by other provisions such as those regarding the treatment of the tenancy on failure of heirs.

It is always open to the subordinate Revenue Courts to consider previous decisions of the highest Revenue Court which appear to be relevant to the decision of a case pending before them and it is desirable that they should follow such decisions, even when unpublished, where it is perfectly certain that the facts are in all respects similar and the issue is the same. Registration Act (XVI of 1903), ss. 2 (7), 17, 49—Agreement to grant lease on happening of contingency, whether agreement to lease—Registration, whether necessary—"Decree" in s 17 (2) (vi), meaning of—Agreement adjusting suit relating to matters beyond subject-matter of suit, whether compulsorily registrable—Procedure—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 375—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 3.

An agreement that upon the happening of a contingent event a lease will be granted is not an agreement to lease within the terms of section 2 (7) of the Registration Act, and does not, therefore, require registration under section 17 (1) (d) of the Act. To fall within these sections a lease or an agreement to lease must be a document which effects an actual demise and operates as a lease in præsenti.

The word "decree" in section 17 (2) (vi) of the Registration Act must be construed in connection with the purpose of the statute, which was to provide for the public registration of documents. It is not confined to so much of a decree as may be operative.

Where, therefore, an agreement adjusting a suit went beyond the subject-matter of the suit by providing that in a certain contingency lands not included in the suit should be leased, and such agreement was recorded in a decree framed under section 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882:

Held, (1) that the agreement did not fall within section 7 (1) (b) of the Registration Act and that though it would otherwise fall under section 17 (1)

(b) of the Act it was excepted by the words "any decree of a Court" in sub-section (2) of the section:

Section 17 of the Registration Act must be strictly construed, as taken in connection with section 49 of the Act it imposes serious disqualifications for non-observance of registration. Unless a document is clearly brought within the purview of the section, it should not be excluded from being treated as evidence.

A mere undertaking to occupy land contained in a document will not make the document compulsorily registrable, unless some interest or right in the thing let is created by the document

Defendant's father obtained possession of a piece of land under a written agreement from the plaintiff for the purpose of building a house on it, on the condition that the plaintiff would have no power to dispossess him during his life, but that on his death in case of a disagreement between his heirs and the plaintiff the latter would have a right to eject them on paying them the price of the materials:

Held, that the agreement was not a lease in any sense, nor was it an undertaking to occupy within the meaning of section 2 (7) of the Registration Act and that inasmuch as it created no interest in the land, it did not require registration under section 17 (d) of the Registration Act. P WARYAM SINGH v. BASANT SINGH, 124 P. The words "grants or assignments of interest" in section 90 (1) (d) of the Registration Act are comprehensive enough to include a lease by Government.

A stipulation, in a lease granted by Government of land situate in Malabar, that the lessee should not erect buildings thereon does not fall within the mischief of section 19 of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act and is saved by section 3 of the Crown Grants Act.

The expression "grant" in section 2 of the Crown Grants Act is not restricted to the transfer of prerogative rights possessed by the Crown but denotes transfers of land of every description.

In construing expressions used in a section of a Statute, it must first be ascertained from the language of the section the class of cases which were intended to be affected If the intention is clear, the occasion for the introduction of the ejusdem generis rule of interpretation would not arise. M HALLINGAL MOOSA v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA, 37 M. Sale of goods - concld.

Plaintiffs agreed to purchase from 1st defendant 5,000 bags of Covelong salt at a fixed price and paid to st defendant as advance therefor Rs. 1,00 on 3 th November 1916 The conditions of the contract were inter alia that the st defendant was to despatch the salt by boats from Covelong to Elephant Gate Basin, Madras, through the Buckingham canal, and the amount due for each consignment was to be paid by the plaintiff before taking delivery at the Elephant Gate Basin. No time was fixed, however, for the delivery of the entire quantity of salt. The course of business adopted was that along with each consignment a watchman was sent by the vendor who was responsible for its custody. The despatch of the salt and its expected arrival in Madras were notified by the vendor, not to the purchasers, but to his own agents in Madras and, when it did arrive, the latter either sent a delivery order to the purchasers or sent one of their own men to meet the boats with the purchasers' representative and indicate that delivery was to be made to the purchasers The 1st defendant sent two consignments on 8th and 17th January 1917, totalling 740 bags, which were shipped on twelve canal boats. The remaining quantity was detained at Pappanchavidi, 1 miles from Covelong, as water in the canal was very low and the boats could proceed no further. The plaintiffs, after complaining of the delay in delivery of the balance of the stipulated salt, formally rescinded the contract on 20th February 1917, and brought the present action for damages. The defendants pleaded: (1) that shipment of the salt amounted to delivery, 2 that they could not be held liable for the contract becoming impossible of performance owing to the state of the canal, and (3) that they had substantially performed the contract and that the plaintiffs' action in rescinding it was premature:

Held, that the property in the goods did not pass on shipment but that the vendor kept them as his property until they were paid for and delivered and that the appropriation at Covelong was conditional only:

The doctrine of lis pendens, as embodied in section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, applies to transfers during the pendency of a suit, even when that suit is terminated by a compromise decree; but in such cases the Court should be satisfied that the compromise is not a collusive arrangement entered into with the object of defeating a purchaser.

Where a transfer is made pendente lite under the authority of the Court within the terms of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, and subsequently the original parties to the suit arrive at a compromise, the Court before recording the compromise must consider whether it is a bona fide one or merely colourable with the object of preventing the transferee from setting up such defence to the action as might otherwise be open to the original defendant. If there is a real and substantial defence to the claim, the compromise is not a lawful agreement within the meaning of Order XXIII, rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the Court should refuse to record it and to pass a decree in accordance with the terms thereof.

By virtue of the provisions of section 3 of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, so long as an estate is under the control of the Manager, the holder of the estate is incompetent to mortgage charge, lease or alienate his immoveable property or any part thereof, and his action in the matter may be ignored.

The mere fact that by virtue of the provisions of rule 16 of the rules framed by the Lieutenant-Governor under section 19 of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, the power to grant leases vested in a Manager under section 17 of the Act is subject to the sanction of the Commissioner, does not in itself give the Commissioner power to grant a lease without consulting the Manager at all, much less can the Commissioner, unknown to the Manager, bind him by an agreement compelling him to exercise his statutory powers.

Section 9 of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act contemplates that the Manager may be either the Deputy Commissioner himself or some one else. In the latter case the powers of the Deputy Commissioner are confined, by rule 5 of the rules framed by the Lieutenant-Governor under section 19 of the Act, to a general control over the management of another person. To say that in such a case the Deputy Commissioner may treat the Manager as non-existent and exercise his powers himself would be to extend the scope of the rule beyond its legitimate meaning.

Transfer of Property Act—contd.

The powers granted by the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act to a Manager should be construed as strictly as the powers of guardians and managers of minors.

It is not essential to the proper exercise of a statutory power to grant a lease that the person having this power should also have power to enter into a contract to lease.

The power to grant leases given to a Manager by section 17 of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act does not include the power to enter into an executory contract to grant a lease.

If the documents or letters relied on as constituting a contract contemplate the execution of a further contract between the parties, it is a question of construction, whether the execution of the further contract is a condition or term of the bargain, or whether it is a mere expression of the desire of the parties as to the manner in which the transaction already agreed to will in fact go through. In the former case there is no enforceable contract, either because the conditions are unfulfilled or because the law does not recognise a contract to enter into a contract. In the latter case there is a binding contract, and the reference to the mere formal document may be ignored Pat HUKUM CHAND v. RAJA RAN BAHADUR SINGH, (1919) PAT. 305; 4 P. L. J. 589 833

Under Order XXII, rules 10 and 11, of the Civil Procedure Code a transferee pendente lite is entitled to come on record and to conduct all proceedings from the date he is added as a party, though he is bound by all orders passed up to that date and cannot raise defences not open to his transferor. A mortgagee pendente lite is within the rules.

An alienee pendente lite is not bound by a compromise between the original parties to which he is not a party. The moment he is impleaded, the only detraction of rights to which he subjects himself is the result of the litigation which has been openly and in his presence tried and decided upon, and what could have been done by way of adjustment or compromise, if he is not before the Court, should not be allowed to interfere with his claim for a fair trial and a decision on the merits.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—The principle of lis pendens enunciated in section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act owes its origin to the maxim that, where the subject in dispute owing to contest passes into the custody of the judiciary, parties to it are under an obligation not to withdraw it from the protection of the Judge. M POLICHERLA VEERARAGHAVA REDDI v. Transfer of Property Act—contd.

The title of a purchaser of land from an Official Receiver, appointed under the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act, requires to be perfected by a proper conveyance executed by the Official Receiver and duly registered, and there is nothing to exempt such a conveyance from the operation of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. C ABDUL HASHIM v. ——— ss. 106, 117—Lease, expiry of—Lessor holding over, position of—Notice to quit, whether necessary—Agricultural lease, applicability of s. 106 to.

A lessee, who, after expiry of the term of his lease, holds over with the consent of the lessor, occupies the same character as he did under the expired lease, and has no right to set up any title adverse to that of the lessor and in derogation of the rights of the latter.

The mere consent of a landlord to a tenant holding over after the expiry of the term of his lease, during the pendency of negotiations for a fresh lease, does not create a contract of tenancy.

Except in so far as its provisions may be made specially applicable by the Local Government to agricultural leases, section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act has no application to such leases.

A tenant who holds over against the wishes of the landlord is not entitled to any notice to quit before a suit for ejectment is filed against him. Pat MOORE v. MAKHAN SINGH 180

——— s. 106—Lease terminable on happening of certain event—Notice by lessee terminating lease, effect of.

Where a lease is terminable upon the happening of an event, as, e. g., a default in the payment of rent, it cannot, in the absence of such event happening, be terminated by the lessee. A notice, therefore, in such a case sent by a tenant under section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, terminating the lease, is of no value. O BISHESHWAR v. CHHEDI LAL 109

The words "transferee of any interest" in section 109 of the Transfer of Property Act include the term lessee.

The rule of English law that the person entitled to the immediate reversion of the demised premises is the proper person to give notice to quit is applicable to India.

In a suit for recovery of rent and ejectment from the house it appeared that the defendants were monthly tenants of a house belonging to one H. On the 1st October 1917 H. leased the house to the plaintiff, who on the 10th February 1918 gave defendants a notice to vacate the house before the 16th March. The entire interest of the lessee and the entire interest of the lessor must vest in the same person in the same right before it can be said that a lease of immoveable property has determined by merger within the meaning of clause (d) of section 111 of the Transfer of Property Act.

A mokarari is not an incumbrance at all except for the purposes of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act and the Bengal Tenancy Act. Pat NATHUNI PRASAD v. ANWAR KARIM 16

The trustees of a charitable endowment cannot convert its funds to purposes other than those marked out by the instrument of trust or the scheme regulating the charity.

The trustees cannot make a cy-pres application on their own authority merely because they consider it desirable to do so.

Where a building is dedicated expressly for use by a particular sect or class or denomination of persons whenever they halt there, its occupation by other persons at other times, when it is not used by the class for whom it was founded, cannot be permitted.

The fact that a building founded for use by a particular class was afterwards re-constructed by members of another class or by the public, will not justify the application of the cy-pres doctrine, unless the sect for whom the building was intended has become extinct.

A follower of Vallabachari, founder of a sect, dedicated a building for use by 'Samastha Vallabha Kul':

Held, that the intention of the dedicator was to restrict the use of the building only to the descendants of the founder who were priests of that sect, and not to all Vallabha Vaishnavas. M GOVINDA DOSS v. GOVINDA DOSS, 10 L. W. 559; (1920) M. W. N. 168 661

Although under-proprietary holdings in Oudh were confiscated absolutely to Government by the Proclamation of 15th March 1858, the rights of the under-proprietors as they existed before the Proclamation were restored in 1859 by letters set out in Schedule II of the Oudh Estates Act and by the Settlement Court proceedings taken under the rules validated by Act XXVI of 1866, and the title acquired by the Settlement Court decrees was a title from the British Government but was the same title which was possessed by the claimants before the confiscation. The title was new in the sense that the grantor was new, but it was old in the sense that what was granted was what was held before. O OUDH BIHARI SINGH v. SURAJ BALI, 6 O. L. J. 394: 22 O. Vendor and purchaser—Consideration, payment of—Suit to recover unpaid consideration—Burden of proof.

Where the plaintiff in a suit to recover the balance of consideration due on a sale sets up a definite agreement that the balance with interest was to be paid on a particular date, the burden of proving the alleged agreement rests upon the plaintiff. He must establish at least a prima facie title to the relief which he seeks, more specially where the vended property as well as the sale-deed have been given in possession to the defendant. Mere denial of the receipt of consideration is not sufficient to relieve the plaintiff and to shift the burden on to the vendee defendant. Pat RAMPAL RAM v. SUBA SINGH, 4 P. L. J. 517 83

Wajib-ul-arz, construction of—Document loosely and carelessly worded—Official record, endorsement on, made by public servant in performance of duty, value of—Custom—Succession—Daughters, exclusion of—Sankaldipi Brahmans.

In interpreting documents like wajib-ul-arzes, unless there are strong reasons to the contrary, the same word should be construed in the same sense wherever it occurs in the document.

Where the whole document is on the face of it loosely and carelessly worded, it has to be interpreted by taking it as a whole and seeing what on a natural construction it clearly means to lay down.

An endorsement on an official record signed by a public servant in the performance of his duties should, in the absence of any evidence to throw doubts on it, be presumed to be correct.

Among Sankaldipi Brahmans daughters are by custom excluded from inheritance. O KESRI KUMAR v. RAM RANI, 6 O. L. J. 431 725

WILL, construction of, principle of—Intention—Hindu Law—Widow, devise in favour of—Estate taken by widow—"Malik" and "full proprietary right," meanings of—Gift over, validity of.

Where one of the clauses in a Will was in these terms: "On my demise my present wife J.' shall get all these immoveable properties and become full owner and enjoy and hold possession thereof, with regard thereto, my daughter and daughter's sons or kinsmen shall not be competent to raise objection" and the Will further authorised the widow to alienate or sell any portion of the aforesaid immoveable properties, for the purpose of performance of religious acts or pilgrimages or necessary expenses, or the whole of the properties in the event of extreme necessity:

Held, that an absolute interest in the immoveable properties left by the testator was conferred on his widow.

The effect of the use of the word malik is to confer on the donee a heritable and alienable estate: the context may, however, qualify or cut down the full proprietary rights that the word prima facie imports.

WILL—concld.

The expression 'full proprietary right' implies absolute power of alienation.

Where a testator grants an absolute interest in the estate to his widow, the gift over of what might remain undisposed of by her would be inoperative in law.

The question in expounding a Will is, not what the testator meant, but what is the meaning of his words. The Court must discover what was the intention of the testator from the words he has used. Although it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with respect to the devolution of property, the Court cannot give effect to any intention which is not expressed or plainly implied in the language of the Will. Those who take under a Will are bound by the expressed intention of the testator. If that expressed intention is unfortunately different from what he really intended, so much the worse for those who wish the actual intention to prevail. C SULOCHANA DEBI v. JAGATTARINI DEBI 30 C.
